Number Is Increased 1100 Over 1948; Most Crowding to Be Across Anacostia

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

More than 3700 elementary students will be on part-time programs when school convenes Monday, School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning yesterday told the Board of Education.

This represents an increase of 1100 over the number on halfday schedules in September, 1948.

Most of the overcrowding will be in the white elementary schools across the Anacostia River in the far northeast and southeast sections of the city. Overcrowding in Negro elementary schools will be relieved during the semester as new buildings are made available.

In five schools serving the two Anacostia areas 2171 white children in 59 classes will have to double up. The schools are Kenilworth, Beers, Congress Heights, Patterson and Stanton.

Kimball Annex Completed

Last year there were 1422 white elementary students on parttime in six schools in the area. Completion of the new annex to the Kimball Elementary School has returned that school to full-time programs. Last year the school had 434 students on part-time to full-time programs.

Relief for the area is not in sight until next semester, when an annex to the Beers School is expected to be ready for occupancy.

Board members at yesterday's meeting aproved plans for a new 24-room building at 4th st. and Mississippi ave. se. in the Oxon Run area to relieve overcrowding at Patterson and Congress Heights. Officials hope to have the building ready by next September, when a new school to replace the Stanton also will be ready.

Enrollments to Increase

In the Negro elementary schools Dr. Corning reported that part-time enrollments will be increased temporarily.

When school opens 1540 children in 44 classes in nine schools will be on half-day schedules, 351 more than a year ago.

The schools are Cook, Langston, Morse, Richardson, Thomas, Birney, Garfield, Payne and Turner.

Much of the part-time schooling will be eliminated for Negro pupils when the new Scott-Montgomery and Miller schools are occupied next month.

Transfer of the Park View School from use by white elementary students to Negro children has ended shortened schedules at the Bruce, Douglass-Simmons and Jones Schools in force last year, Corning said.

The school board, holding its

'Fingerprintless' Man Is Seized in $41,500 Stickup

Hickory, N. C., Sept. 7 (U.P.).—Robert James Pitts, "the man without fingerprints," was captured today and charged with a $41,500 South Carolina stickup.

FBI agents and local officers roused the notorious former convict out of sleep at a hotel.

Pitts had been the object of a Nation-wide search since the hold-up August 13.

He lost his fingerprints in 1941 through skin grafts, the FBI said. Arrested later, he challenged authorities to identify him.

Dulles Enters Race to Succeed Himself; May Oppose Lehman

Would Help Slow Up 'Trend to Statism,' Forestall 'Bad Deal'

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Senator John Foster Dulles (R., N. Y.) yesterday announced he would be a candidate to succeed himself in a special senatorial election in November.

His announcement made it virtually certain that the choice of the voters of New York State would be between Dulles and former Gov. Herbert Lehman, champion of the New Deal policies of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Both Republican and Democratic Parties will nominate their candidates at State executive committee meetings later this month, but there appeared little doubt that both Dulles and Lehman would be nominated.

The special election is to fill the unexpired term of Democratic Senator Robert F. Wagner, who resigned early this year. Gov. Thomas E. Dewey appointed Dulles to serve in the interval before the election.

Dulles announced his candidacy in a statement which drew the campaign issue squarely down the line of the Administration's domestic policy. As for foreign policy, Dulles praised the present system

Catholics Plan Million Dollar High School

Archbishop O'Boyle Discloses Project At Teachers' Mass

By Martha J. Hall
Post Reporter

Plans for a Catholic high school for boys to be erected here this fall at a cost of more than one million dollars were revealed yesterday by the Most Rev. Patrick A. Boyle, archbishop of Washington.

The announcement was made at a solemn pontifical mass in St. Matthew's Cathedral, 1927 Rhode Island ave. nw., marking the opening of the school year for more than 25,000 students in archdiocesan private and parochial schools. Classes begin today.

In addition to the high school, Archbishop O'Boyle said, five parochial schools are to be completed by September, 1950, as part of a $3,300,000 archdiocesan building program.

School Near Catholic U.

Archbishop O'Boyle told the 900 teachers from Catholic schools and colleges at the mass that the new boys' school will be erected on an 11-acre site at 4300 Harewood rd. ne., near Catholic University. The school will accommodate 1000 boys.

Construction of the school will begin following ground breaking late in October or early in November, and first classes will be enrolled in September, 1951, the archbishop said.

"We hope to have a high school that will be a credit to our city and to the archdiocese," the prelate declared.

"The new high school, like all other Catholic schools of its type, will be a continuing source for educating young men in the truths of their religion, and instilling in them even greater love of God and country, besides giving them the finest possible secondary education."

Financing Undecided

Qualified pupils from the archdiocese will be accepted at the high school, which will be the first educational institution operated by the archdiocese. Other Catholic schools in the area are private or parish institutions.

Method of financing the school has not yet been decided, according to archdiocesan officials.

Fay Upholds Civil Rights in Gaming Cases

Refuses to Prosecute Where Arrests Are Made Questionably

United States Attorney George Morris Fay said yesterday that he will insist that there be no violation of a person's civil rights before his office will prosecute gamblers arrested by police without warrants.

Fay's statement followed Police Superintendent Robert J. Barrett's pledge Tuesday to go on arresting gambling suspects without warrants and to keep gambling down by harassment.

Four lottery cases involving men arrested without warrants have been nol prossed by Fay during recent weeks, because, he said, "we did not think we could maintain a successful prosecution." A similar case was continued at Fay's request yesterday in Municipal Court.

Two hours after Fay issued his statement, vice squad policemen arrested a numbers suspect without a warrant, the second time in two days, and the sixth time in less than six weeks.

"We prosecute many cases where no warrants have been obtained," Fay said. "But in such case the evidence must clearly show that a felony was being committed in a police officer's view, that there was no violation of the rights of the individual arrested, that the incident would be believed by a judge, and that it was unreasonable for the arresting officers to get a warrant."

Fay said that a warrant could be

Bar Extended to Divorcee

Hostile Wife Can't Take Stand To Harm Husband, Court Rules

(Stories on Other Court Decisions on Page 6)

Staunton, Va., Sept. 7 (Spl.).—No matter what her husband does while they are married, a wife just can't tell a court about it to his detriment, the Virginia Supreme Court ruled today. Acts as well as words are private communications.

The rule applies even though the wife is divorced after the acts, and turns hostile to her husband, the court held. And privacy of the marriage relationship is so sacred that it must prevail though "crime sometimes go unpunished."

The court reversed a robbery conviction of Henry Menefee in Pittsylvania County Circuit Court and sent the case back for retrial. He was sentenced to 10 years for implication in a robbery in Franklin County in which a man was killed on May 24, 1947.

Over objection of Menefee's counsel, his wife was allowed to testify about his actions on the day of the robbery. By the time of the trial, they were divorced, but not on the day of the robbery.

So, the court held, the defense was right in contending that her evidence actually amounted to "communications privately made" by Menefee during the marriage and thus not admissible as evidence under the State code.

Wages Not at Issue

By The Associated Press

Strike threats were levelled today at three railroads by independent brotherhoods.

While 30,000 workers on the Missouri Pacific Railroad made ready for a strike at 4 p. m. (EDT) Friday two more strikes were ordered on inter-plant connecting railroads in the Pittsburgh district.

The strikes in the Pittsburgh district could seriously affect steel-making operations and idle upwards of 100,000 workers in a few days.

Wages are not involved in the disputes. A spokesman for the Brotherhoods of Locomotive Engineers, Enginemen and Firemen, and Railroad Trainmen said they have 282 unsettled claims involving about $3 million in the Missouri Pacific dispute. The Order of Railway Conductors is expected to follow the lead of the other three brotherhoods.

The Union Railroad dispute already has been passed on by a Presidential board. The railroad accepted the recommendations of the board last July 29. But the union refused to go along.

Dallas Debutante Killed at Sea In Fall Down Ship's Ladder

Girl Was Returning From European Tour With Mother, Friends

Boston, Sept. 7 (U.P.).—A pretty Dallas debutante was killed and her escort was critically injured when they fell backward onto the promenade deck of the S. S. Excalibur while climbing a ladder at 4:30 a. m. Saturday, the ship captain reported tonight.

Captain Sampel Norman Groves gave his report of the death of Miss Adrienne Atwell, 19, as the Excalibur arrived here from Mediterranean ports.

Her escort, Robert M. Willard, 21, also of Dallas, was taken from the Excalibur aboard a Coast Guard cutter. He was examined by Dr. Walter Wegner, noted Boston brain surgeon, and then taken to Peter Bent Brigham Hospital for further treatment of a skull fracture.

Miss Atwell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Webster Atwell and a granddaughter of Federal District Judge William Hawley Atwell, and Willard, according to the captain were "walking side by side up the ladder from the promenade deck to the boat deck, a distance of about 9 feet.

"They fell backwards together when they lost their balance," he said. "The sea was fairly calm. Several people observed the accident (and) the ship's doctor immediately went to the scene."

Navy Chiefs' Smear Probe Stories Differ

Kimball Tells Court He Erred in Testimony Before Congress Body

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Top Navy officials disagreed yesterday over whether or not they had discussed launching an investigation last spring of the anonymous document smearing Air Force chiefs.

Undersecretary of the Navy Dan A. Kimball told a Navy court of inquiry that he had been "in error" about two points of his testimony before a congressional committee last month.

He said yesterday that it was late May instead of April when he asked such a probe—on complaint of Air Force Secretary W. Symington—and that it had been Vice Admiral John D. Price, vice chief of naval operations, to whom he had talked rather than Rear Admiral Thomas B. Inglis, director of naval intelligence.

Taking the stand a little later, Price said he didn't recall Kimball's approaching him about the document or asking an investigation.

Price testified that he first became aware of the existence of

U. S. Steel Offers Four-Room House, Land Under $8000

United States Steel, through its home fabricating subsidiary, Gunnison Homes, Inc., has entered the low-cost housing field with a prefabricated plywood, four-room home designed to sell for under $8,000 in the Washington area, including landscaped lot.

The new design, called the Champion line, is set for immediate production. A four room, 2-bedroom model home has been erected on Farragut avenue in Kensington, Md., and will be opened to the public Sunday in The Washington Post's "Homes of '49" housing exhibition.

Samuel Walker, president of Walker Homes, Inc., local Gunnison distributor, estimated the Champion line would sell here for nothing down to qualified former servicemen, and require payments of about $50 per month.

George Urges Tariff Act To Aid Britain

Collapse Could Upset U. S., Senator Says as Trade Debate Opens

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

A plea for quick renewal of the reciprocal trade program as a step toward world economic stability yesterday kicked off the Senate's long-delayed tariff debate.

Leading the fight for renewal, Senator Walter F. George (D., Ga.) linked United States tariff policy directly to the three-power dollar talks that started here yesterday.

"If Britain goes down (economically) we will go down too in a matter of months," George warned.

"Senators may not believe that. But if the pound sterling takes a real decline in all the sterling areas, to something like its actual intrinsic value, perhaps it will not be Britain alone that will decline."

George later told newsmen he was not referring to Britain "going down" politically but to the possibility of a "drastic drop" in the pound sterling. He said that would inevitably have serious economic repercussions here.

Taking the floor in reply, Senator Eugene Millikin (R., Colo.) told the Senate Britain "still has a great Colonial empire" and "I don't think Britain is going down."

"I believe it would be a tragedy beyond measure if anything ever happened that Britain and the United States should cease being friends.

"There will be nothing in this debate, so far as I am concerned, that will have unpleasant repercussions.

"But it also would be a tragedy if we were foolish enough to make ourselves responsible for the troubles of Great Britain. Let's keep on cooperating, but through strength and not weakness."

The main Senate fight centered on GOP proposals to continue in

Barsov Expected to Be Killed In Russia, His Diary Hints

New York, Sept. 7 (AP).—A Russian flier, who went back home after deserting to come to the United States, reportedly wrote before he left: "Now I have to be destroyed if I shall not be corrected by the labor camps."

The fatalistic acceptance of the future was said to have been written by Anatole Barsov, 32-year-old Russian air force lieutenant who escaped from Russia in October, 1948, came to this country, and last July decided to go back.

"I am ashamed to look into the eyes of the workers of Russia because I have destroyed myself," he allegedly wrote.

Excerpts from a diary and random notes are published in this week's issue of Life Magazine. Life said one of its correspondents found the diary, with a bitter denunciation of the United States, abandoned in a hotel room which Barsov had occupied.

The documents later were turned over to the State Department.

Barsov was put over the Austro-Russian border by American officers last August 31 after he told the Russian Embassy in Washington he wanted to go home.

Promises Country Will Tighten Belt Still Further and Push Sales Abroad

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

Sir Stafford Cripps, the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, promised yesterday that his country would tighten its belt still further, cut its production costs and push its sales abroad.

He made these pledges on the opening day of an American-British-Canadian conference on the growing shortage of dollars in Britain and the whole of the sterling area.

He said he was "quite sure" that outright American aid would cease with the projected end of the Marshall plan in 1952, thus echoing a reminder delivered earlier in the day by John W. Snyder, Secretary of the Treasury.

Drastic Cuts Decided On

Cripps recalled that the British Government had already decided to make "very drastic" and "unpleasant" cuts in its imports as an emergency measure, but said the time had come to consider "readjustments" which would be permanent solutions rather than temporary expedients.

"We are determined to do everything we can," he said, "especially in the sphere of government policy, to reduce our costs of production and to enable our industries to supply on a competitive basis the goods which are needed by the rest of the world.

"We recognize, however, that production alone is not enough, and that we must sell our goods to the right markets if we are to earn the funds to enable us to buy what we want."

Tariff Question Raised

The chancellor did not specify what help Britain would need from the United States and Canada, although he said the boosting of British earnings "does not depend on ourselves alone."

It was left to Douglas Abbott, the Canadian Minister of Finance, to point to at least four fields in which the United States must "reexamine" her economic policies at home and abroad.

The first of them he described as tariff policy"—an obvious reference to the American tariffs which Britain and other countries still find too high.

The second he described as

State Official Talks in Senate; Words Switched

By The Associated Press

A voice from the State Department spoke out on the Senate floor yesterday—and shocked Senators quickly stuffed the forbidden words into the mouth of a Senator.

The embarrassed State Department official was Winthrop Brown, chief of the Office of International Trade Policy. He blushed furiously while Senators made sure the record would not show that a non-senatorial voice had spoken on the floor.

During debate on the Reciprocal Trade Act, the question arose as to whether President Truman had sent a measure to the Senate in the form of a treaty or a joint resolution.

Senator George (D., Ga.) turned to Brown, permitted on the floor as one of George's aides. Brown spoke right out loud—"it was a joint resolution."

Senator Wherry of Nebraska, Republican floor leader, objected to a State Department official answering directly.

But it was quickly agreed the record would show that Brown's few words came from the mouth of Senator George.

Connally Labels Chiang 'Absconder'

Leaders Frown

West Ignored As Gabrielson Chooses Aides

By Robert S. Allen

Chairman Guy Gabrielson's recasting of the Republican National Committee is making no hit with Western party leaders.

So far, he has brought in no one west of the Atlantic Coast area.

His new $20,000-a-year executive director, Ab Hermann, is a fellow New Jerseyman, and the new finance director, Sinclair Weeks, is a millionaire Boston banker.

Hermann has a reputation as a dynamo in New Jersey politics and Weeks is a long-time New England kingmaker and big-money raiser. But neither knows much about the West, nor has more ties there than Gabrielson.

He plans other major national committee changes. But so far, restive Western leaders have received no indication they will get a look-in.

Gabrielson's principal immediate concern is fund raising.

National committee expenditures are about $80,000 a month. Since last January contributions have equaled only a fraction of that outlay. The $500,000 surplus left over from last year's presidential campaign is virtually gone.

Considerable hectic backstage wire-pulling is taking place over the vacancy on the Securities and Exchange Commission.

In recent years, appointments to this one-time militant New Deal agency have been engineered by broker members of the Manhattan Club. The Wall Street traders are again furiously busy, but there are indications they may not swing the weight they have in the past.

President Truman is taking his time on this appointment.

Three leading candidates are in the field. Two have the backing of Manhattan Clubbers, the other is an independent.

The former are Donald Cook, Washington, and Francis Green, Richmond. Cook is a utility lawyer with powerful ties in the New York Stock Exchange. Green is a former SEC attorney who also has potent Wall Street support. He is assisting Defense Secretary Johnson on the arms-for-Europe program.

The independent is Quinn Shaughnessy, Washington attorney and combat Marine veteran. He has had extensive Government experience, including the RFC, Treasury and Interior Departments, and the SEC. In the latter, he was closely associated with Supreme Court Justice William D. Douglas, when he headed the agency. Shaughnessy handled the commission's case against the Hitler government when it attempted to float a bond issue in the United States.

By The Associated Press

Senator Connally (D., Tex.) told the Senate yesterday that Chiang Kai-shek deserted his people and "absconded" to Formosa with 138 million dollars in gold.

The Texan turned bitter criticism on the generalissimo in opposing any United States military aid for non-Communist China.

"Chiang Kai-shek deserted his people to go to Formosa," Connally shouted, adding that he fled with 138 million dollars rightfully belonging to the Nationalist government.

Chiang is no longer leader of the Nationalist government, Connally said, and no one can say who are the responsible leaders in non-Communist China who should be given aid.

Connally is chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the Truman Administration's chief Senate spokesman on foreign affairs.

Answers Knowland Sharply

The Texan engaged in a caustic exchange with Senator Knowland (R-Calif.) when Knowland demanded that Secretary of Defense Johnson order the joint chiefs of staff to proceed to the Far East to confer with Gen. MacArthur on the China situation.

The joint chiefs are now in Alaska, where they are inspecting U. S. defense outposts.

Senator Wherry of Nebraska, the Republican floor leader, also got into the fray with Connally and Knowland.

The clash was a prelude to the "main show" fight over military aid to China which is certain to break out into the open on the Senate floor later this month when the $1,450,000,000 global arms program comes up.

Knowland has offered an amendment to provide China with military help at the discretion of President Truman.

Connally turned on Knowland and inquired:

"You want to help non-Communist China. Well, who is non-Communist China? Is the President going to China and stop everybody on the street to ask him if he is non-Communist and then give each one his share?"

Never Talked to Marshall

Connally demanded of Knowland when he was last in China. Knowland said 1946. Connally then wanted to know if Knowland had talked to Gen. George C. Marshall, who made an official trip to China for the Administration before becoming Secretary of State. Knowland said he "never had that pleasure."

Then with heavy sarcasm, Connally said:

"Here is a Senator whose passions are on fire and whose heart is stirred up about China who has never talked to General Marshall about China."

Wherry told Connally he had "information" that MacArthur would be glad to come to this country and testify. Connally wanted to know where he got the information. Wherry declined to say.

Several attempts by Senators to get MacArthur to return to the United States to testify on the Far Eastern situation have been unsuccessful.

Military Pay Raise Is Vital Bradley Says

Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, yesterday said the Senate must raise military pay by 302 million dollars a year or "accept a progressive downgrading in the caliber of personnel."

A House-approved bill authorizing the pay increase is on the Administration's list of "must" legislation still pending in the Senate.

In a letter to Democratic leader Scott W. Lucas (Ill), Bradley urged him to give it "every opportunity" of passage in the rush for adjournment.

Saying the contemplated raise would enable the armed services to attract and keep competent men needed during a critical period, the general added that failure of the Senate to act "makes the situation hazardous in the extreme."

Members of the armed forces and their families, he said, look upon the bill as more than a "deserved pay raise and a revision of an antiquated pay structure."

"To them it has become a mark of uncertainty as to the regard which the Congress and the people hold for the armed services," he said.

Mobilization Plan Reported Put on Shelf

By James E. Warner
NYHT News Service

The Truman administration has quietly decided not to press for enactment of an overall standby mobilization plan at this Congress, and probably not at the next unless the world situation darkens greatly, it was learned last night.

The plan, over which President Truman and Bernard M. Baruch publicly contradicted each other June 30, has been prepared and is being kept up to date by staff experts of the National Security Resources Board in cooperation with officers of the Armed Services and other Government agencies.

It is in the form of an omnibus "one package" bill, providing for food rationing, price controls, wage-and-hour controls over labor, relocation of strategic industries and Government agencies, priorities and allocations for scarce materials, and border censorship of radio, cables, press and other communications.

The law was drafted to be put into effect immediately in a national emergency if Congress approved, or for "standby" enactment enabling the administration to put the controls into operation at its discretion should the international situation warrant. It has never been submitted to Congress in either form.

Reasons given were two-fold: first, that in order to convince Congress it is necessary, military and strategic information which it is not deemed wise to reveal at this time would have to be made public; and secondly, that with a Republican-Southern Democratic coalition opposing the President on many major measures, it is not deemed feasible to plunge such an important defense measure into politics.

danger from within," and said that throughout the world "there is a growing tendency to exalt the state and to treat the individual as unimportant."

"We believe," he declared, "in the sacredness and the worth of the human personality, and we want all individuals to be resourceful and self-reliant; thrifty and possessed of enough self-control to give up present enjoyment to set aside for future security; cooperative and compassionate, fearing God and loving neighbor.

To Fight Trend to Statism

"But in every country, including our own, powerful central governments are actually producing opposite results. The State is assuming an almost total responsibility for the public welfare.

"To that end it commandeers much of what the individual produces and extends its detailed controls into every aspect of life. In consequence, more and more individuals are gradually losing both the inventive and the means to develop the qualities that make them worthy."

Dulles declared the "trend to statism" must "be stopped here and now" and pledged himself to oppose "proposals which exalt the state at the expense of the individual." He said that regardless of whether these proposals were labelled "dictatorship of the proletariat," the "welfare state," or the "Fair Deal, they must be stopped or there will be "for everyone a bad deal."

Dewey Hails Announcement

Talking with reporters after issuing his statement, Dulles agreed that, under Governor Dewey, New York had gone part of the way toward President Truman's "Fair Deal." But, said he, "I'm quite sure they haven't gone nearly so far," and called attention to certain economic restraints on the States. As an illustration of his own thinking on these matters, Dulles referred to a recent letter to his constituents in which he favored limiting Federal aid to education to those States whose low income was reflected in poor standards of education.

Adviser on foreign affairs to Dewey during the New York Governor's presidential candidacy, Dulles was generally conceded to be Dewey's choice for Secretary of State had he been successful. As it was, he was the U. S. delegate to the U. N. General Assembly, and had an active part in developing the bipartisan attitude toward foreign policy. His term in the U. N. expired last April, and he said yesterday he did not expect reappointment since it would be "very difficult" to serve as an Administration spokesman internationally while waging an "active campaign" in domestic politics.

Main Break Floods Chain Bridge Area

A break in a 24-inch water main near Chain Bridge, which connects the new million dollar Falls Church water system with the Arlington water system, flooded portions of Chain Bridge road near the Potomac River early yesterday.

The major break, which was repaired during the day, occurred after a new connection had been made to remedy a persistent leak at the juncture of the two systems.

Park Bill Signed

President Truman signed yesterday a bill adding some 206 acres to the 1531 acres in the Petersburg National Military Park in Virginia. The land, in tracts on either side of Seige Road, adjacent to the park, is to be transfered by the Army to the Department of Interior for park purposes.

ABA Questions Propriety Of Judges Being Witnesses

St. Louis, Sept. 7 (AP).—The American Bar Association raised a question today about the propriety of judges testifying at trials.

It adopted a resolution to that effect. Although no names nor cases were mentioned, delegates recalled the Alger Hiss perjury trial of last June, when Supreme Court Justices Frankfurter and Reed were character witnesses for Hiss.

The resolution simply directed the president of the ABA to appoint a special committee to look into the propriety of judges testifying.

Hiss, a former State Department employee, was accused by Whittaker Chambers of belonging to a prewar Communist underground in Washington. The Hiss jury could not agree on the perjury charge.

Hoover Findings Backed

Another resolution adopted put the lawyers on record in favor of the broad recommendations of the Hoover Commission—to dispose of overlapping and unnecessary expense in the Government.

Otherwise the resolutions group ran into a dead end, with nine proposals turned down.

The assembly heard Fred M. Vinson, Chief Justice of the United States, call for less delay, expense and technicality in the work of all courts.

Vinson particularly urged the States to set up procedures so that prisoners, who now appeal directly to the United States Supreme Court at the rate of some 600 a year, may be heard in the States. That, he said, should "stem the flow" of direct petitions from prisoners.

Few Petitions Accepted

He explained that prisoner petitions, many in the prisoner's own longhand and without legal help, had little legal merit. Only four per cent of their petitions have been accepted by the high court.

Sharp criticism of a crime-drama radio program produced with the cooperation of the Federal Bureau of Investigation brought a spirited defense today from an FBI official.

The discussion occurred at a sectional meeting of the bar convention.

Arthur J. Freund, St. Louis attorney, who heads the association's section on criminal law, termed "offensive" the American Broadcasting Co. program, "This Is Your FBI." He said it featured "meticulous blueprinting of criminal activities."

No "Blueprints of Crime"

Louis B. Nichols, assistant director of the FBI, denied the programs contain "blueprints" of crime, and said the FBI cooperated in the program originally because some programs were placing "improper emphasis on crime.

"We can't have good law enforcement without aroused public opinion, and aroused public opinion depends on education," Nichols said. "That is what we are attempting."

Freund also mentioned the FBI's failure to apprehend the persons who stole ballots impounded as evidence in vote fraud cases from a Kansas City courthouse safe in May, 1947.

"Everyone seems to be agreed that the FBI is a fine organization, but we here in Missouri would be very happy if the stolen Kansas City ballots could be recovered by the FBI, and the culprits brought to task," Freund said. "But perhaps that's one of those crime impossible to solve that we hear about."

Clapp Takes Plane For Mid-East Study

Lake Success, Sept. 7 (NYHT).—Gordon R. Clapp, board chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, left for the Middle East today on a United Nations economic survey mission, which he said probably would recommend expenditure of several millions of dollars on such projects as irrigation and water storage.

Clapp, whose mission is basically economic but also political in that it takes an economic approach toward solution of Israeli-Arab political problems, said today that his first concern would be to suggest short-term projects that may help solve the Arab refugee problem.

Somewhere between 500,000 and one million Arabs are still homeless as a result of the Palestine war. Disagreement over their repatriation has been a principal barrier to establishment of a formal Israeli-Arab peace.

Clapp, who left LaGuardia Field at 1 p. m., said that the mission will perhaps take a look at Egypt, Iran and Saudi Arabia, but its main focus will be on Lebanon, Syria, Trans-Jordan and Arab Palestine, where the refugee problem is concentrated. He plans to headquarter in Beirut, Lebanon and to make an interim report to the General Assembly by about November 1.

The United States has given strong support to this new approach to the Middle East political problem, and it has been indicated in Washington that the United States will have a sympathetic attitude toward the financial requirements of any program that is recommended.

Labor Cost Gains Listed In Survey

Geneva, Switzerland (Thursday), Sept. 8 (AP).—Industrial labor costs in Britain, France and The Netherlands have risen less than in the United States since the war, a United Nations survey said today.

The survey by the U. N. Economic Commission said also that the average output per man in industry in Britain and Sweden is slightly higher in relation to the prewar levels than in the United States.

The survey is based on production, employment and wage statistics of the United States and 12 European countries. The American records equaled or excelled those of the other nations involved.

The survey was prepared for the quarterly review of the European economy next month, but was published in advance today because of possible bearing on the financial talks in Washington.

U. S. Costs Rose 108 Per Cent

During 1948, average labor costs were 65 per cent above the prewar average in Britain, but 108 per cent above the prewar average in the United States, according to the survey.

Commission officials said privately the figures showed excessive labor costs were not responsible for deterioration of Britain's competitive position in world trade in relation to the United States.

Labor costs in the Netherlands were rated at 89 per cent and in France 96 per cent above the prewar level.

The relative increase of labor costs in the Scandinavian countries generally equaled that in the United States and the increases in Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Germany and Italy were considerably higher.

Pegged to Dollar Equivalents

The survey was pegged to dollar equivalents. It made allowance for employers' contributions in the form of social security schemes and paid holidays.

The relative increase of labor costs in Finland was the highest, 298 per cent above the prewar level. The Belgian increase was 199 per cent and the German 132 per cent.

During the first quarter of 1949, the average output per industrial worker was 23 per cent above the prewar level in Sweden and 22 per cent above prewar in Britain. The increase in the United States was listed at 20 per cent.

Of the 12 European countries, only Britain, Sweden, Hungary and Finland had reached or exceeded their prewar level of productivity in 1948.

two variations. First, war in the near future, victory of America. Then, war in three to five years, dictatorship of communism in the whole world."

After landing at Linz in the U. S. zone of Austria last year, Barsov made this entry in his diary on October 12:

"At 11 o'clock demands of the high commissioner to testify on secret data about the Soviet Union. Our refusal to talk with them. Later I was given vodka and drank until I got dizzy, then I fell asleep."

On October 14, however, he wrote, "I began to give all data."

Pirogov said he and Barsov were threatened by Soviet agents here. He gave that as Barsov's reason for deciding to return to Russia.

Throughout the early part of the diary Barsov refers to "depressing thoughts," "nasty" moods and quarrels with Pirogov.

As the Rusians toured Virginia —their goal when they left Russia because they had heard about it on a Voice of America broadcast —Barsov's entries become more impersonal.

He tells of the professor at Sweet Briar College who "gave the advice that I should buy a suit, because here people are judged according to their clothes."

After visiting a Russian colony at Yale, Va., he wrote of "comfortable farmhouses" and said: "Religion is flourishing. They all look much younger than their ages. Their income is very big."

He admired the "automatization and the quickness of all the jobs acomplished by the workers" on an assembly line at a Ford automobile factory.

Later Barsov wrote:

"What mud there is here. What a lie is here. What a bureaucracy. What a craving toward making money.

"From appearance, all those squalid houses scattered over the fields, the pitifully poor clothing and the emaciated faces eloquently point to their grim life."

The statement then turns to the writer's past life, reviews his working-class background, his Socialistic education, jealousy of his wife, and his failure to advance in the Army because of "small things like arguing with the brass and drinking on duty."

Europeans Set Meeting On Germans

(From Press Dispatches)

Strasbourg, France, Sept. 7—The European Consultative Assembly was asked today to hold a special meeting in January to admit Germany to the Council of Europe.

Duncan Sandys, Winston Churchill's son-in-law, said the executive committee of the European Movement had "reaffirmed its desire that Germany be voted membership as soon as possible." Churchill is head of ER.

The assembly also was asked today to approve a human rights program to prevent any other peoples being sent "on the road to Dachau or Buchenwald."

The assembly will debate and probably vote upon in its closing session Thursday.

Soviet Tries New Berlin 'Peace' Move

Berlin, Sept. 7 (AP).—Reports that Russia has proposed a new plan to settle East-West differences in Germany cropped up in Berlin newspapers today, but Western allied officers were bearish.

"There is nothing to it," commented a U. S. military government spokesman, "beyond the usual Communist trial balloon technique."

A Stockholm story distributed by the Allied-licensed news agency DPA outlined a purported scheme by which Russia would gain a voice in Western German affairs in return for concessions in Berlin and the Soviet zone.

Berlin newspapers said the plan had been handed to the U. S. embassy in Moscow.

There was no word from Moscow on the report.

United States State Department officials in Washington said they were unaware of any new Russian proposals on the German question.

New Drug Held Safe For Use in Bread

By The Associated Press

Mouthful that it is, polyoxyethylene sorbitan mono-oleate may safely be used in bread, biochemist Arnold Osterberg, North Chicago, Ill., said yesterday.

Osterberg testified at a Food and Drug Administration hearing on proposed standards for bread.

One proposal would permit the use of the multi-syllable drug in amounts up to .067 per cent of the baked bread.

Osterberg said the drug, known in pharmaceutical forms as sorlate amd tween-80, helps increase fat absorption in some persons.

a verse from "Deutschland uber Allies" (Germany Above All), the old national anthem, discarded the idea when others pointed out that foreign nations might misunderstand.

Dr. Erich Koehler, elected president of the lower house, told the delegates their responsibility was great for they must prove "we Germans do not put our faith in force but in the great idea of cooperation with other peoples."

High Commissioners There

The Bundesrat, or upper house, was the first to meet. It was in session but 35 minutes. Gen. Sir Brian Robertson, John J. McCloy and Andre Francois-Poncet, the British, American and French high commissioners, were present.

The Bundesrat elected as its president Karl Arnold, Christian Democratic minister - president (governor) of North-Rhine Westphalia, the largest state.

Koehler, elected president of the lower house in a secret ballot, also is a Christian Demcorat. He is former president of the British-American bizonal economic council.

At the two-hour-and-13-minute session Social Democrat Erich Ollenhauer demanded that the western occupation powers end their dismantling of German industries.

"Europe is not being served by destroying productive plants, he declared.

Would Shift Capital

The socialists also proposed that the capital be moved from Bonn to Frankfurt.

A third issue, incorporation of Berlin into the west republic despite its location deep within the Soviet zone, also was raised by a Social Democrat, Paul Loebe.

The next session will be held September 13.

The Bundestag was chosen in elections last month. The conservative Christian Democrats led all other parties. The Christian Democrats are expected to form a cabinet with the support of another group, the Free Democrats, and the rightist Germany Party. The leftist Social Democrats, came out second in the election.

Czech Protest Is Distortion, Envoy Says

Prague, Sept. 7 (AP).—A Czech note protesting that American troops had kidnaped 22 Czechoslovak soldiers and a boy in a border incident drew fire from United States Ambassador Joseph E. Jacobs today.

The note was handed to the embassy last night. The Prague Radio broadcast it and the government-controlled press printed the text under such headlines as "Terroristic Deed of American Soldiers on Czech Territory."

The American version was not printed. The American side of the story is that 22 Czech soldiers were caught on the American zone side of the German border August 27 and were returned to Czech authorities the following afternoon.

In a statement to reporters, Jacobs said the incident was "merely a dispute as to the exact location of the boundary line."

In stead of presenting their case in a "dignified manner so that a check could be made to determine who is right and who is wrong," the ambassador added, Czech authorities had publicized a note "in which the facts and the importance of the incident have been exaggerated or distorted for propaganda purposes."

Catholics Predict Offensive in Prague

Prague, Sept. 7 (U.P.).—Catholic church sources tonight predicted a major offensive this week against the Communist-run government's "church bill" which turns priests into civil servants under tight government control.

The Catholic News, a government paper, today declared the church's alleged antistate policy had been dictated by the Vatican and the United States.

Camden Killer Questioned by Psychiatrists

Camden, N. J., Sept. 7 (AP).—Why 28-year-old Howard Unruh slaughtered 13 persons and exactly how he did it were investigated today.

John Wilson

Thirteen murder warrants—one for each of his victims—were issued today against the former artilleryman and sharpshooter. All charge Unruh killed "wilfully, unlawfully, felomously and with malice aforethought."

The 13th fatality was 12-year-old John Wilson. He died from a bullet wound at the base of the brain today, about 18 hours after the shooting.

If the hollow-cheeked killer is proved sane he faces the maximum penalty of death in New Jersey's electric chair, according to Prosecutor Mitchell Cohen.

Unruh, the Bible-reading war veteran who collected weapons as a hobby, went berserk yesterday. He stalked his victims in a usually quiet East Camden neighborhood, killing 12 instantly with bullets at close range from his German Luger pistol. Four others were wounded.

Unruh, who also has been in the hospital with a bullet in his hip, was taken to the New Jersey State Hospital for Insane at Trenton today. He'll be under observation for at least two weeks.

Two psychiatrists questioned Unruh today. Two others saw him yesterday. Cohen refused to disclose any results.

Unruh's mother, Mrs. Freda Unruh, about 50, was prostrated. The family says she has not been told the full extent of her son's crime.

Cohen said Unruh related he planned to kill four of his neighbors—the druggist, the barber, the tailor and the shoemaker—"because of resentment."

He did kill: Druggist Maurice Cohen, 40; Shoemaker John Pilcharik, 27, and Barber Clark Hoover, 30.

He missed Thomas Zegrino, 29, who was out of his tailor shop when Unruh stalked in. Instead he killed the tailor's bride of a month who cowered in a rear room.

Also killed were the druggist's wife and mother and seven strangers—two men, two women and three children.

The Veterans' Administration said Unruh was never hospitalized by the Army. His service record showed no physical or mental ailment.

Bermuda Warned of Hurricane

Miami, Fla., Sept. 7 (AP).—An enormous Atlantic hurricane changed direction today and headed for Bermuda.

The British-owned Honeymoon Isles, 600 miles off the South Carolina coast, was told to prepare for hurricane force winds (75 miles an hour and over) before noon Thursday.

Winds were estimated at 130 to 140 miles per hour on the eastern side of the disturbance, the Weather Bureau said.

"This is now a very large and severe hurricane and ships should avoid it," Chief storm forecaster Grady Norton said.

The center was located about 240 miles south of Bermuda. It was heading north or northeast at 8 to 10 miles an hour.

The hurricane is the fourth of the season.

Attlee Calls Britain And U. S. Partners

Bridlington, England, Sept. 7 (NYHT).—Prime Minister Clement Attlee told the Trades Union Congress today that Britain and the United States were "partners" and that the British delegation had not gone to the Washington financial talks with "cap in hand for assistance."

Attlee welcomed President Truman's speech in Philadelphia on August 29, saying:

"There is a lot of effort being put up to try to cause bad blood between Britain and the United States. There are people here who do their utmost to foment hostility in the United States to the Labor government. They seek for party aims to play on the prejudices of American opinion.

"Seek to Cause Disunity"

"They also seek to cause disunity by suggesting that the United States will interfere with the internal policy of this country. In doing that they join hands with the Communists. The emphatic statement of President Truman should silence them."

Attlee said "the less said the better" about the Washington talks because "we all wish to help them (the British delegation) and to do nothing to make their task more difficult."

Britain's economic crisis, Attlee emphasized, was not "just a question between Britain and the countries of the North American Continent." He said: "It is a question of the relationship between the dollar area on the one hand and the sterling area, and indeed, the whole of the rest of the world, on the other."

Stresses Partnership

The Prime Minister went on: "This is not a question as is sometimes falsely represented, of Britain being a mere suppliant for American aid, coming with cap in hand for assistance. In dealing with the problems of the postwar world, Britain and the United States have been partners."

Attlee pointed out that while the United States had been "generous" in assisting other countries, Britain itself had advanced £900,000,000 ($3,600,000,000) toward postwar reconstruction in other countries.

The Prime Minister noted that Winston Churchill recently criticised the Labor government for making these advances. He said: "His (Churchill's) strictures stem curiously from the great advocate of European unity. We are not ashamed of having helped others and we are not ashamed of having been helped ourselves."

Attlee told the nation's eight million organized workers they must cooperate with the government and not "abuse" the social services "in such matters as sickness benefits and the health service."

Texas Judge Tells Grand Jury to Get Tough on Joints

Alice, Tex., Sept. 7 (U.P.).—Judge Paul A. Martineau today instructed a special grand jury to investigate honkytonks, houses of prostitution, beer taverns and public officials in its investigation of the slaying of W. H. Mason, a crusading newscaster.

"You will find," the judge told the 12-man jury, "that if you close up any unregulated beer tavern and houses of prostitution you will go a long way toward stopping shootings in your town."

The jury convened to inquire into the fatal shooting of Mason, a hard-hitting newsman who conducted an antivice crusade over an Alice radio station. He was shot on July 29. Sam Smithwick, an ousted deputy sheriff, is charged with murder.

Finn Red Lumber Union Heads Give In, End Strike

Helsinki, Finland, Sept. 7 (U.P.).—Communist union leaders of 13,200 Finnish lumberjacks announced tonight their members would end a three-week strike tomorrow.

Workers of the wood and food industries had decided to resume work Monday.

The lumberjacks union surrendered unconditionally.

The official decision to end the strike was taken in the face of a return to work of practically all the lumberjacks who openly flouted their union's strike order.

Their action left an estimated 20,000 Finnish workers still on strike.

MONEY TALK—This was the beginning yesterday in Washington of the critical financial conference among American, British and Canadian economic policy-makers. Around the table (from left) are British Ambassador Sir Oliver Franks; Sir Stafford Cripps, Chancellor of the Exchequer; United States Secretary of State Dean Acheson; British Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin; United States Treasury Secretary John W. TARIFFS—From Page 1 somewhat modified form the "peril point" restrictions which the Eightieth Congress wrote into the last trade act extension.

New Tariff Act Asked

An amendment offered by Millikin empowers the Tariff Commission to recommend "peril points" below which tariffs could not be cut without damage to American industry. If the President exceeded these points in any forthcoming trade pact he would have to account to Congress.

Backing up George's plea for unrestricted extension of the President's tariff-cutting powers, Senatir A. Willis Robertson (D., Va.) said the peril point provision amounts to 'the power of veto in making trade agreements."

"If we in this Democratically controlled Eighty-first Congress can do no better than to restore the 1948 act, with its vicious peril points, we shall go far to unnerve the western world," said Robertson.

Fears Billions Wasted

"It is one thing to proclaim cooperation and multilateral trade as the end product of our foreign economic policy. It is another thing to take those daily steps necessary to attain that goal.

"Unless we return to our original trade agreements philosophy I for one fear that we shall, by that single omission, undo much of the good that the billions of dollars we have appropriated for foreign loans and assistance to recovery have accomplished."

Millikin reported he would vote against the bill unless peril points were continued. He said tariff concessions under the act have injured many domestic producers and have "totally failed" to bolster our exports.

"We have expanded our markets only to the extent we have been willing to give away goods," he argued.

Vandenberg Perplexed

Siding with Millikin, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.) said he could not understand Administration opposition to the peril-point amendment, especially since it agreed to the trade law's "escape clause."

In accepting "escape clause" provisions Vandenberg said in effect recognized there was a point beyond which tariffs could not be cut without damaging our economy.

"If peril points are such a heinous offense, then why isn't the escape clause the same kind of offense?"

Senator George W. Malone (R., Nev.), introduced a substitute for the bill vesting tariff-making powers completely in the Tariff Commission, and renaming it "The Foreign Trade Authority."

Malone charged the three-power dollar talks are a "smoke screen" for an Administration scheme to "slip through" the Trade Agreements Act and establish free trade.

"Each Day's Delay Hurts"

George said the more than two months delay in extending the law (it lapsed June 30) has contributed to world instability—that each day's delay "adds credence to foreign countries' fears that we preach world cooperation, but don't intend to make it real."

"The British crisis has been caused by many factors, and it is clear to me that if we had not had a workable trade agreement act in the past the crisis would have come sooner and in even more critical form," the Georgian said.

"It is only by lowering barriers to world trade that we can hope to create the kind of world in which these recurring crises can be minimized and . . . eventually eliminated."

George said our exports are now running about 13 billion dollars a year, contrasting with about 6½ billion in imports.

"In order to sell we must buy," he told the Senate.

"The recent decision of the British government . . . to curtail purchases from the United States is an important indication of what will happen to our exports if we continue to import half as much as we export," George said.

Pacific Talk Friday

"America's Responsibility in the Pacific" will be outlined by Lieut.-Comdr. John L. Taylor, USN, of the Office of Island Governments, Department of the Navy, at the meeting of the Middle Atlantic Division of the Association of American Geographers at 8:15 Friday at the National Archives Building auditorium.

Cripps Says Britain Will Bolster Economy

"policy regarding customs administration"—a sore point with the British, who complain that American tariff reductions are often made useless to them by over-strict rules and regulations of the American customs authorities.

The third field Abbott mentioned was that of "policy regarding foreign investment"—a hint, apparently, that the United States should invest far more freely and widely abroad, especially in underdeveloped areas.

Burden of Responsibility

And the fourth, the most far-reaching of all, he described as "policy regarding the distribution of the financial burden of political responsibilities in various parts of the world."

This was the first public hint that the United States might be asked to share the cost of maintaining strategic outposts of Britain and other western European nations in the Mediterranean, the Middle East and the Far East.

The British are now spending an estimated one-fifth of their national income on their defense establishment, especially on the strategic outposts of their Commonwealth and Empire around the world. Their ministers have come to Washington determined, if possible, to cut this budgetary burden which adds to their production costs and indirectly hampers their dollar-earning capacity.

Political As Well As Economic

The cost British "political responsibilities" is expected to figure not only in this week's direct discussions of the dollar problem, but also in next week's talks on foreign policy between Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin and Secretary of State Acheson.

Finance Minister Abbott, speaking for Canada yesterday, underlined his point by saying that the dollar problem was political as much as economic.

"In recent months," said Abbott, the western democracies have made great progress in building a structure for political cooperation, particularly through the Atlantic Pact. In that pact we recognize the simple but essential fact that an attack on one is an attack on all and that we will, individually and in concert, take the necessary action to restore and maintain security.

"That principle is as important in economic as it is in political cooperation. In fact, one may not be able to exist without the other. Economically and in the field of human welfare our fortures are also linked, and we go up or down together."

Bevin Calls for Harmony

The same thought was expressed by the leading participants when they met at the State Department in the morning for a brief meeting on procedure.

Bevin, who had reached Washington early in the morning from New York, said the United States, Britain and Canada must "harmonize all our political, our financial and economic actions so that at least when we hand over we can say we are leaving the world safer for those who come after."

Secretary Snyder, who is chairman of the conference, expressed the hope of finding "some ground on which to work out the problems facing us today, not only in the United Kingdom, Canada and the United States, but in the world as a whole."

"It is not the intention of the United States," the Secretary said, "to interfere in any way in decisions which rightfully belong to the sovereign government of the United Kingdom. We are, however, interested friends, and we shall be glad to discuss any aspect of British policy which may be raised with us.

"We appreciate the significance and difficulties of the task confronting our British friends. In a spirit of mutual understanding, we are prepared to listen to your views, and to take such cooperative steps as would appear to be appropriate within the framework of our existing foreign economic policies."

"Framework" Defined

Talking to reporters after the morning meeting, Snyder defined the "framework" as consisting of the Marshall Plan, the International Bank and Monetary Fund, the Havana Charter and other measures of foreign economic policy either approved by Congress or proposed by the Administration. This was interpreted to mean that he would approve nothing which would involve new legislation outside the "framework."

Snyder explained that no cut-and-dried list of subjects had been approved for discussion, and that the meetings were "very fluid" in their procedure. There would be, he said, a steering committee composed of the three chief delegates from the three countries.

These nine would be Secretaries Snyder and Acheson and Economic Cooperation Administrator Paul Hoffman for the United States; Bevin, Cripps and Ambassador Sir Oliver Franks for Britain; and Finance Minister Abbott, External Affairs Minister Lester Pearson and Ambassador Hume Wrong for Canada.

About 40 officials of the three governments attended yesterday's afternoon meeting, which was described in an official communique as a "plenary session." This morning the entire group will split into working teams which will have specific subjects assigned to them by the ministers.

Bevin Shows Wealth Of Humor, at Least

By The Associated Press

British Foreign Minister Bevin lived up to his reputation for impromptu witticisms at the opening yesterday of an otherwise solemn three-power financial conference.

Pressed by photographers to pose for more pictures, he remarked: "I never thought a man with an overdraft would get such a wonderful welcome."

When a photographer asked him to move closer to Treasury Secretary Snyder, Bevin cracked: "I am going to keep very close to him for the next five days."

Matson Vessel Takes On Sugar Cargo in Hawaii

Honolulu, Sept. 7 (AP).—The first Matson ship was being loaded here today since Hawaii's dock strike began 130 days ago.

Longshoremen hired by the territorial government began putting 5500 tons of sugar aboard the Hawaiian Retailer. Matson is the biggest shipper between Hawaii and the mainland.

The question of who will sail the ship remained undecided. The independent marine firemen and the CIO cooks and stewards walked off before the ship was unloaded in support of the striking CIO longshoremen of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

U. S. Opposes Pact Proposal

By the United Press

United States officials will insist on a joint command, composed of the United States, Britain and France, for the North Atlantic Pact defense setup, an informed source revealed yesterday.

The source said this Government is opposed to a single overall commander in peacetime, as suggested in some foreign quarters, and that indications are its views will prevail.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, World War II Allied commander in Europe, and Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff, have been mentioned prominently as supreme commander if such a post were set up.

It can be stated that Bradley will be the United States representative on the three-way high command, if the other pact nations agree to the proposal.

The blueprint for the military organization was begun in July when the U. S. joint chiefs met in Europe with military leaders of the other pact nations.

Tentative plans call for establishment of four geographical regional defense groups. If these plans are carried out:

1—Canada and the United States would be charged with the immediate defense of North America.

2—Norway, Denmark and Britain would defend Scandinavia.

3—Western Europe would be defended by Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg.

Credit Program Is Activated By Marshall Plan Countries

Paris, Sept. 7 (NYHT).—The Organization for European Economic Cooperation approved and signed today its "little Marshall plan" for 1948-1950. Thih is the intra-European payments system whereby the various governments extend each other credit, or "drawing rights," to promote continental trade.

Meeting the wishes of the United States for more evidence of self-help—by increasing the means of exchanging commodities among themselves, the OEEC unanimously agreed that 25 per cent of the drawing rights they had accorded each other should be transferable.

This radical departure from the system that governed trading operations during the past 12 months a rigid system of bilateral trade balances—involves $284,875,000.

Rescuers Drain Well For Boy, Find Nothing

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 7 (U.P.).—A report that a schoolboy fell down a 35-foot well was proved false today when rescuers, working desperately for four hours, drained the well dry and found no body.

A rescue party under the direction of deep-sea diver Capt. Bruce Temple pumped the well after Ray Symes, owner of the South Seattle Construction Co., reported to the King County sheriff's office that he saw a boy "disappear" near the well.

Right-to-Work Act Upheld in Virginia

Staunton, Va., (AP).—The Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals today upheld the State's "Right to Work" Act, which outlaws union membership as a requirement for obtaining or holding a job.

The "right to work" case came up on appeal from Elizabeth City County circuit court. The law was passed by the General Assembly in 1947.

Harley A. Hawkins was awarded judgment of $330 in the trial court after he lost his job in a printing shop when he refused to join a union.

He alleged that his discharge and the union shop agreement by which Claude F. Finney, operator of a print shop near Newport News, consented to employ only union labor were illegal under the 1947 law.

The closed shop provides that union membership is necessary to obtain a job. Under the union shop, a person can get a job but must join a union to keep it.

Finney appealed the circuit court decision on the grounds that the law prohibits, rather than regulates, agreements whereby union membership is made a condition of employment.

He also contended that the law violates the State constitution; adversely affects contractual rights and liberties protected by the Fourteenth Amendment, and charged that it "impairs the fundamental right of assembly as exercised by working men when they seek to form and maintain unions."

Justice Archibald C. Buchanan wrote the unanimous opinion. He said:

"Legislation that protects the citizen in his freedom to disagree and to decline an association which a majority would thrust upon him on the ground that it knows what is best for him, does no violence to the spirit of our fundamental law.

"The protection of minorities is the boast of our institutions and a basis of their asserted superiority over totalitarian regimes."

Unlicensed Contractor Suit Upheld

Staunton, Sept. 7 (AP).—A case involving the question whether a building contractor's failure to pay the State license tax to do business bars his right to recover money due on a construction contract was decided today by the Virginia Supreme Court.

The high tribunal reversed a 1948 Fairfax County Circuit Court verdict against the Welles Engineering Co.

The company entered into an agreement with Edward W. Revercomb to build a house and stable, but Revercomb refused to make further payments for labor or materials with a balance of $2655.27 owed the contractor. While the work was being done, another person acquired an interest in the property and, after the payments were refused, the contractor obtained a mechanic's lien and instituted suit to enforce payment.

Chief Justice Edward Hudgins, who wrote the unanimous opinion reversing the lower court and remanding the case for a new trial, declared:

"There is no provision expressly declaring that contracts made by an unlicensed contractor shall be unenforceable.

"When the object of the statute is not for the purpose of regulating the business for public health, morals, etc., but solely for the purpose of obtaining public revenue, the penalty imposed is regarded as being upon the person and not upon the business.

"Contracts made in the course of such business are valid and enforceable."

The high court upheld another decision of Fairfax Judge Paul E. Brown in the case of Ralph J. Edwards vs. Thomas B. Hobson. Edwards claimed that while he was staying at Hobson's tourist home his belongings were destroyed by fire caused by Hobson's negligence. He sought to recover $1302.94.

Judge Brown ruled Edwards had failed to prove negligence on Hobson's part, ordered Edwards' evidence struck and dismissed the case. Edwards appealed.

Howard Student Wins Victory Over Virginia Jim Crow Law

Staunton, Va., Sept. 7 (AP).—Norvell Lee, Negro Olympic boxer and Howard University student, won a State Supreme Court victory today over Virginia's Jim Crow law.

The high court unanimously threw out his conviction and $25 fine at Covington, Va., for refusing to move to a segregated car on a Chesapeake & Ohio train near Clifton Forge. He was arrested September 14, 1948.

The decision, written by Justice C. Vernon Spratley, reversed the Alleghany County Circuit Court. It followed a decision of the United States Supreme Court in June, 1946, outlawing Virginia's Jim Crow practices on interstate buses.

Lee bought a ticket from Covington to Clifton Forge and took a seat in the front section of a railroad coach under a sign designating the section for white passengers. However, persons of both races were in the section of the car at the time.

The young Negro refused to change his seat when asked to do so. After the sheriff was called, he got off the train, obtained a refund on his ticket to Clifton Forge and bought one for transportation from Covington to Washington, D. C.

When he reentered the train, he was arrested without being questioned.

Lee asked the State Supreme Court to reverse the Circuit Court decision on the ground that he was an interstate traveler and that his arrest was "an unconstitutional regulation of interstate commerce and an invalid delegation of legislative power."

The Virginia high court found that Lee was an interstate passenger and said the only question was whether while he was traveling in this status he failed to take a seat assigned him pursuant to the State segregation law.

"The Federal courts in recent years have uniformally held invalid State statutes requiring segregation of the races in interstate commerce as contrary to the commerce clause of the United States Constitution, and have upheld statutes requiring equality of treatment of white and colored passengers in interstate commerce as constitutional and in accord with national policy," the opinion stated.

Hostile Wife Gets Deaf Ear

the Supreme Court opinion and other members concurred.

"It is far better," Justice Miller wrote, "that occasional hardships be suffered and that crime sometimes go unpunished than to limit confidential communications between husband and wife to mere spoken or written words."

That, he added, "would render susceptible of and expose to public observation and knowledge all confidential conduct, transactions and acts not consisting of spoken or written words, which the continued tranquillity, integrity, and confidence of their intimate relations demands to be shielded and protected by the inviolate veil of the marital sanctuary.

"In our opinion, the immunity and ban of the statute applies to and includes all information or knowledge privately imparted and made known (between husband and wife) through conduct, acts, signs, and spoken or written words."

School Deeds Request Urged On City Head

The Falls Church school board last night instructed City Superintendent Irvin H. Schmitt to request the Fairfax County school board to deliver deeds to the Madison-Jefferson School.

Last night's action followed receipt of a resolution from the county reaffirming its offer made July 5 to transfer the Madison-Jefferson School to the city, conditioned "on a financial adjustment to be arrived at through a conference of city and county officials or if that fails by a court decision."

The city previously had indicated it would take over the bonded indebtedness of the school property with the school. School officials last night expressed fear that the county may now want reimbursement for not only the bonded indebtedness of the property but also for money it has spent on the school.

Superintendent Schmitt reported that the ratio of city and county students now enrolled in Madison-Jefferson School is three to one in favor of the county. Total enrollment at the school is 957 with 710 county pupils and 247 city students.

The Oak Street Elementary School which is under county control has 750 students with about 500 of them from the county, he said.

It may eventually be necessary to get all city students enrolled in the Madison-Jefferson School or to build new schools, officials said.

Unoffending Man Tries to Battle Under-Home Odor

And Westphal can't poison them. The State Fish and Game Commission says so. It's too dangerous.

Westphal has trapped four in seven days, but the clan seems to multiply at a faster rate.

Belvoir MP Is Charged in Fort Shooting

Court martial charges alleging involuntary manslaughter were preferred Tuesday against Pvt. Leland J. Connor, 20-year-old military policeman at Fort Belvoir, Va.

The charges were in connection with the fatal shooting of Pvt. Ernest Roberts, 25, of Oklahoma City, on the evening of September 1 at the military installation.

The order was signed by Capt. Peter Somers, commander of the Provost Company, in the organization to which Private Connor belonged.

A maximum penalty of dishonorable discharge and three years confinement is involved.

Pfc. William A. Hendrick, 20, mentioned in the first reports of the shooting, was released yesterday after investigation showed that he had not fired at the fleeing soldier.

The shooting occurred, post authorities said, after Roberts failed to heed an order to halt as he was running from the scene of a disturbance.

The two MPs then were ordered to investigate a routine call from Young's Village Canteen where a man was reported to be badly beaten. When the MPs arrived, Roberts was reported to have fled the scene.

Senator's Son Faces Speeding Count Monday

Dr. Samuel P. McCarran, 27-year-old son of U. S. Senator Patrick McCarran (D., Nev.), is scheduled to face a Bethesda Police Court hearing Monday on a charge of driving at unreasonable speeds.

Dr. McCarran, who lives at 5051 Bradley blvd., Chevy Chase, was arrested early last Thursday after police said he sped down Wisconsin ave. in Bethesda at "between 70 and 75 miles an hour."

He posted $51.45 collateral on the unreasonable speed charge, as well as $6.45 for failing to have a registration card in his possession and $26.45 more for driving on an expired permit. Police said the car he drove bore the tags: "USS—1—Nevada."

N. Y. Teachers to Test Anti-Subversive Law

New York, Sept. 7 (NYHT).—The C. I. O. Teachers Union announced today that it will file suit in New York Supreme Court "sometime this week" to challenge the constitutionality of the new State law which authorizes dismissal of any public school teacher who advocates violent overthrow of the Government or is found to be a member of a "subversive" organization.

The law, which went into effect July 1, requires the State board of regents to draw up a list of these prescribed organizations.

Sailor Commended by Judge In Street Soliciting Case

A sailor who testified against a prostitute who solicited him was commended yesterday in Municipal Court by Judge Aubrey B. Fennell.

Convicted largely through the testimony of Petty Officer 3/c Henry Pophin, 26, was Henrietta Smith, 35, of 1512 9th st. nw.

She was given the maximum sentence of 90 days in jail plus a $100 fine or 90 additional days in jail.

"If more of these people who get solicited," said Judge Fennell, "would come in here and act as witnesses, it would bring about a healthy situation. Too many people are deterred by the inconvenience and the time that must be consumed and do not report the incident to police."

Pophin, who lives in Barracks I, Potomac Park, testified that he called police the night of August 30 because a man was molesting him in a park at 12th st. and New York ave. nw.

Plainclothesman Clarence I. Williams was sent to the scene and he trailed along when Pophin left with an unidentified man.

They walked to 8th and O sts. nw. According to the testimony, the Smith woman was waiting there and she informed Pophin he could have a "good time" and it would cost him only five dollars for the night plus two dollars for the room.

Williams heard the offer and made the arrests. The man who had accompanied Pophin identified himself as Andrew Foster, 35, of 212 Indiana ave. nw. He was charged with pandering and freed in $300 bond. His case has been continued until September 16.

obtained easily in an hour from any part of the city.

"The only time we turn down prosecution of a case," Fay said, "is when we don't think we can prosecute successfully after we consider all the evidence."

Continuance Obtained

In Municipal Court yesterday, Fay's office asked for a continuance in the case of Albert Turner, 42, 309 I st. se., because one of the arresting officers could not be present. Judge Aubrey Fennel continued the case until September 27.

The latest warrantless arrest of a numbers suspect involved a man who told police he was carrying numbers slips, according to Vice Squad Chief Lieut. Roy Blick.

Police spotted the suspect walking in the 1500 block of 3d st. nw., and carrying a brown paper bag, Blick said. When police asked the man what was in the bag, he replied "You know what I've got here, numbers slips," according to Blick. Police arrested the man, identified as Leroy Stephens, 39, 1505 4th st. nw., and charged him with operation of a lottery and possession of numbers slips. He was released under $1500 bond for appearance in Municipal Court today.

Major Barrett declined to comment on Fay's statement guaranteeing individual rights except to say "My men are familiar with the rules and regulations prescribed by the courts."

"I am not going to tell them to pass up unusual things they may run into," he said.

U.S. Won't Tax GI Insurance 'Dividends'

Internal Revenue Commissioner George J. Schoeneman has ruled that veterans will not have to pay income tax on the $2,880,000,000 of insurance dividends they are to receive from the Veterans Administration next year.

Schoeneman held that the "dividends" are in reality only adjustments of the premiums paid by the veterans on their insurance. Accordingly, he said veterans who receive the "dividends" should not include them in their income tax returns.

Meanwhile, VA reported that the tapering-off GI education program already has listed 44 per cent of the Nation's World War II veterans on its rolls.

Only a handful, however, have exhausted the full four years of education and training benefits to which they are entitled.

VA said about 6,600,000 veterans have taken some sort of education or training under the GI bill or Public Law 16, which gave similar benefits for disabled veterans.

Of the total, more than 2,500,000 have been enrolled in high schools, vocational and trade schools, business schools and other institutions below college level.

More than two million have enrolled in college and university courses.

More than 1,600,000 took on-the-job training.

And more than 500,000 enrolled in institutional on-farm training, a program combining classroom training with actual farm experience.

By June 30, 112,000 veterans had used up their GI bill educational benefits and 120,000 disabled trainees had been declared rehabilitated.

Wherry Assails Truman Plan as Federal Mastery

Senate Republican Leader Wherry (Nebr.) said yesterday President Truman's legislative program would make the Government master of the people.

In a delayed reply to the President's Labor Day addresses, Wherry said in a statement:

"The President's constant harping upon what he calls 'selfish interests' without naming them is getting a bit shopworn. It smacks of demagoguery.

"If it is selfish to fight for preservation of the freedoms of the people and to oppose spoilers who guide the President's spendthrift, socialistic policies, then I take the epithet as a compliment."

German Churches Enter Malmedy Case

Munich, Germany, Sept. 7 (AP).—German church representatives laid thick bundles of documents before United States Senate investigators today to support their complaints of cruelty to German troops convicted of the Malmedy massacre.

The documents in eGrman—were not made public today. The Senate subcommittee recessed its hearings until next Tuesday in order to attend an international parliamentary conference in Stockholm.

A declaration by S. S. Gen. Sepp Dietrich that he was kicked and permanently injured in the investigation that preceded the trial in 1946 was disclosed.

Didn't Know Who Kicked Him

Dietrich made the declaration yesterday during questioning in Landsberg Prison by Senator Hunt (D., Ala.), one of the investigators. He said he did not know who kicked him because his head was covered by a hood such as all Malmedy suspects had to wear outside their cells to prevent communication with other prisoners.

Dietrich is one of 73 S. S. (Elite Guard) troopers convicted of a part in the murder of some 700 American prisoners at Malmedy, Belgium, during the Ardennes offensive of 1944. Accused of ordering his S. S. Panzer division to take no prisoners, he was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Six of the convicted men are under death sentences.

One of those six, Col. Joachim Peiper, figured in a public attack before the Senate investigators today by one American Army officer upon another.

American Doubts Another

Col. A. H. Rosenfeld of Mount Holly, N. J., who was law member on the court of seven officers, said "I personally doubt the veracity" of testimony given by Lieut. Col. Harold D McGowan, one-time prisoner of Peiper who was a witness at the trial in Peiper's behalf.

Rosenfeld went on to say "McGown and Peiper were entirely too friendly those nights they spent talking together (while McGown was a prisoner). Peiper, with 600 of his men, was able to escape the trap when completely surrounded and when he escaped McGown was with him."

McGown testified at the trial that he and 135 other United States soldier prisoners were treated well by Peiper's outfit. He said Peiper avoided firing on a spot where wounded Americans might have been grouped for treatment and finally effected the release of the American prisoners.

Greeks Wiping Out Guerillas

Athens, Greece, Sept. 7 (AP).—Greek communiques reported today that three Communist guerilla bands which slipped out of the Grammos area a month ago are being exterminated.

The Greek rebel cause has become entangled in the row between Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia and the Soviet-led Cominform. A foreign ministry spokesman said the Czechoslovak National Bank has granted a loan of 100,000,000 crowns ($1,000,000) to the guerillas.

(A Yugoslav army spokesman, Lieut. Gen. Ljubo Vuchkovic, wrote in the Belgrade newspaper Borba that Russia has sold out the Greek rebels in an effort to turn all her attention to Tito. He blamed recent rebel failures on Russian orders displacing Markos Vafiades, pro-Tito rebel chieftain.)

UNESCO Plans Bigger German, Jap Programs

Paris, Sept. 7 (NYHT.). — Dr. Jaime Torres Bodet, director general of the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, told the Anglo-American Press Association of Paris today that the U. N. agency's general conference would be asked later this month to approve a greatly extended program of UNESCO activities in Germany and Japan.

Delinquents Must Get Along Without Blarney

Dublin, Sept. 7 (U.P.).—It looked for a while today as if the Blarney Stone might go on a good will tour of the United States to help combat juvenile delinquency.

The American author, John P. H. Hewlitt said he had obtained permission for such a tour.

But Sir George Colthurst, who owns Blarney Castle in which the stone is imbedded, said it was not going to be moved. Irish officials agreed.

Satterthwaite Named As Envoy to Ceylon

President Truman yesterday nominated Joseph C. Satterthwaite of Michigan, a foreign service career officer, to succeed Felix Cole as Ambassador to Ceylon. Cole is taking a new foreign service assignment.

Mr. Truman also nominated Lieut. Gen. Elwood R. Quesada of the Air Force to be chairman of the joint technical planning committee.

Los Angeles Sweats Under 103 Record

Los Angeles, Sept. 7 (U.P.).—The temperature soared to 103 degrees today for the hottest day in six years and an all-time record for this date.

The heat was blamed for the death yesterday of a 2-year-old boy who suffocated in a parked automobile.

MISSOURI PACIFIC RAILROAD

WILL CEASE OPERATING

2 p.m. Friday, September 9

WHY?

Because Engine and Train Service Employes Will Quit Their Jobs Rather Than Arbitrate Their Differences

Cause of the Dispute

This is because of a difference in interpretation of written agreements between our railroad and its train service employes as to which employes should have been used for service already performed by others, or the proper compensation for services, past or future, whether covered by agreement or not.

The Proper Disposition of the Dispute

Disputes of this character have always existed in the railroad industry just as in other industries. In 1926 the railroads and their employes requested legislation which Congress enacted as the Railway Labor Act providing methods for disposition of disputes such as the one in which the Missouri Pacific and its employes are engaged. The Railroad Adjustment Board was established in 1934 at the request of the labor organizations as a tribunal with lawful authority to hear and settle these disputes. The employes of the Missouri Pacific now say they will not submit these cases to the Railroad Adjustment Board for disposition, although this Board was established at their request to make possible the peaceful settlement of such cases.

The Railway Labor Act also provides that when other means fail to dispose of cases of the character involved in these disputes, the President of the United States may in his discretion appoint an Emergency Board of three men to hear the matter in dispute and recommend a fair and equitable way of settlement. The President of the United States did appoint such an Emergency Board on the Missouri Pacific on July 8, 1949, and it heard both sides of the dispute and submitted its report to the President on August 2nd.

The Missouri Pacific has accepted the findings of this Board. The train service employes of the Missouri Pacific have refused to accept the findings of the Board, thus nullifying the letter and spirit of American democracy which is exemplified by a mutual, cooperative settlement of grievances between management and labor, rather than by recourse to the use of force through the strike weapon.

Missouri Pacific's Position

First, we believe in obeying the letter and spirit of the laws of the country, in this case the Railway Labor Act, whose fate seems to hang in the balance.

Second, we have an obligation to our shippers and travelers to furnish them transportation at a reasonable cost in keeping with the responsibilities set forth for railroad management in the Transportation Act of the United States.

Third, the owners of this property are entitled to fair consideration to the end that the cost of operating it shall not be out of keeping with the industry generally.

Finally, we must stand on these principles in spite of the fact that the train service organizations will not do so.

Where the Responsibility for the Present Emergency Lies

The responsibility plainly lies with the officers of the four train service brotherhoods involved because they have a remedy at law and by the conclusions of the President's Emergency Board and they will not accept either.

It is with great regret we make this announcement because we fully realize the personal hardship this strike will inflict on thousands of people not in any way connected with this dispute, and the fact that many industries will be forced to close their plants when Missouri Pacific transportation ceases. While this strike has not been called on International Great Northern Railroad and Gulf Coast Lines it will result in discontinuance of Missouri Pacific Lines through service with this part of the Missouri Pacific Lines system.

President Truman's Emergency Board has recommended arbitration under the Railway Labor Act and in the end some form of arbitration is the only way that such matters can be settled. The Missouri Pacific has repeatedly agreed to accept the decision of an arbitration board, whether the decision is for or against the railroad.

The officers of the four train service brotherhoods have said they will not arbitrate under any conditions. This strike, therefore, will be the sole responsibility of the officers of the four train service brotherhoods who prefer to call a strike rather than submit to democratic processes for solution of the dispute.

Odom's Death May Bring Ban on Races

By the United Press

The Government may move to end high-speed, closed-course air races of the type in which Bill Odom, celebrated pilot, was killed Monday at Cleveland, it was disclosed yesterday.

Delos W. Rentzel, administrator of Civil Aeronautics, told the United Press he will call a meeting of officials of his agency, the National Aeronautic Association and other interested parties to discuss "the future of the national air races."

The NAA is the governing body of sporting aviation.

Elimination Proposal

"We will propose," Rentzel said, "that high-speed, closed course races of the type in which Odom crashed be eliminated, unless a course more distant from population areas can be found."

Odom's radically modified F-51 Mustang fighter went out of control in the $40,000 Thompson Trophy race and crashed into a home in suburban Berea five miles off the racing course at the Cleveland Municipal Airport.

Three Killed in Crash

Two occupants of the home, Mrs. Jeanne Laird, and her 13-month-old son, Craig, died with Odom in the explosion and fire that followed.

"It is our feeling," the administrator said, "that the National Air Races in general have contributed much to the development of aviation and should be continued. But we propose to reexamine all phases of spectator protection, including the possibility of a new site."

Hegenberger, Atom Expert Of AF, Retires

The Air Force yesterday announced retirement of Maj. Gen. Albert F. Hegenberger, expert on atomic energy and chief of the Air Force's special weapons group.

Hegenberger, a native of Boston, served during the last war as chief of staff of the Fourteenth Air Force and later as commander of the Tenth Air Force in China.

The Air Force also announced these new assignments for other officers:

Maj. Gen. Caleb V. Haynes, to be deputy commander for services of the Military Air Transport Service, with headquarters at Andrews Air Force Base, Md. He was formerly inspector general of MATS. His successor has not been named.

Maj. Gen. Richard C. Lindsay, deputy director of plans and operations in the office of deputy chief of staff for operations, to be given special duty of an undisclosed nature. Brig. Gen. Joseph Smith is replacing Lindsay.

Brig. Gen. William A. Matheny to be chief of staff of the Continental Air Command's eastern defense division at Mitchel Air Force Base, Hempstead, N. Y. Matheny has been with the U. S. military advisory group in Greece.

Rules Issued On-Cut Price Air Services

The Civil Aeronautics Board yesterday announced the rules under which it will permit scheduled air lines to continue low-cost "air coach" services.

The board, noting that all current authorities for such service will expire at the end of this month, said it will authorize continuation for another nine months.

Its studies to date, CAB said, however, have convinced it that profitable air passenger service requires the maintenance of standard charges for the great bulk of plane travel. For that reason, it will not allow any "indiscriminate extension of coach fares" on the scheduled carriers.

The coach-type service is generally offered at about four cents a mile, and involves omission of numerous luxury items such as meals aloft and special attendants for passenger needs. Most of the coach services are offered at off-hours, usually late at night.

The board asserted that it is evident that the low-cost fares are practical only with high-volume business, and thus would usually require equipment larger than the conventional DC3 type plane having only 21 to 24 seats.

Included among the coach services that the board said it will authorize to be continued is that by Capital Airlines between Washington and New York.

The board announced that it will also continue to authorize, for another nine months, the "family-fare plan," under which some air lines offer a 50-per-cent reduction for members of one family traveling with a family-member who paid full fare. This is usually offered on the slow-business days of the week, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. The board asserted it will not approve, as some lines have proposed, an extension of the bargain rate to all days of the week.

Political Labels

It is an interesting coincidence that the President of the United States and the President of Columbia University, speaking on the same day to widely separated audiences, inveighed against the prevalent use of catchwords, epithets and abstract labels in political debate. Mr. Truman called them "scare words." And a great many of the terms he had in mind, it must be acknowledged, could have no other function than to frighten, for they are devoid not only of precision but indeed of any real meaning. Perhaps political speakers and writers ought to be required to append a glossary to their texts. A mere dictionary affords no help at all. Here is the way the President put it in his speech Sunday at the Allegheny County Free Fair:

> Last November the people gave the selfish interests the surprise of their lives. The people just didn't believe that programs designed to assure them decent housing, adequate wages, improved medical care and better education were "socialism" or "regimentation." So the selfish interests retired to a back room with their high-priced advertising experts and thought things over. They decided that the old set of scare words had become a little mildewed. Maybe it was time for a change. So they came up with a new set of scare words. Now they're talking about "collectivism," "statism" and "the welfare state."

The general thesis here is so sound that it might seem captious on our part to note a certain indefiniteness in the phrase "selfish interests." It is clear enough from the context in which the President employed the words that "selfish interests" are interests opposed to his program. General Eisenhower approached the problem by appealing to the legal profession, somewhat naively in our opinion, to provide "precise, legal definition" for the semantic quagmire. Addressing the American Bar Association at St. Louis, he said this:

> How can we appraise a proposal if the terms hurled at our ears can mean anything or nothing, and change their significance with the inflection of the voice? Welfare state, national socialism, radical, liberal, conservative, reactionary and a regiment of others—these terms, in today's usage, are generally compounds of confusion and prejudice. If our attitudes are muddled, our language is often to blame.

In sober truth, such words are now drained of all sense; they convey only uncomfortable connotations. The general could scarcely have found an apter illustration of his point than the speech delivered from the same platform by the president of the Bar Association, Frank E. Holman, who spoke of a trend toward statism and noted an "attitude of acquiescence in the trend toward welfare government on the part of many leaders who actually themselves do not believe in it." Whether Mr. Holman means by this that he disapproves of Federal aid to education, tax-paid health insurance, expanded social security benefits or communized fire departments, it is impossible to say. It might help a good deal if he were a bit more explicit.

Unhappy Austria

If fairness and reason counted for anything in the relations between east and west Europe, an Austrian treaty would have been agreed upon long ago. Last June at the conference of Foreign Ministers in Paris it did appear that an agreement in principle had been reached. But that was only because it suited the purposes of the Kremlin at that moment to have it appear that a final settlement was in prospect. In recent weeks it has been all too evident that the Russians are not ready to leave Austria, and that fact doomed the negotiations in London regardless of any arguments that were made and any concessions that were offered.

The State Department has good reason to be bitter over the cat-and-mouse game that the Russians are playing. In its statement of last week the department accused the Soviet authorities of "seeking to reserve to themselves the war booty which they had previously agreed to relinquish." It was not indulging in hyperbole. The facts on which the statement was based had previously been reported in the press. In addition to making exorbitant demands under the guise of claiming former German assets in Austria, the Kremlin refused to agree that Austrian law should apply to Soviet enterprises in Austria after the signing of the treaty or that disputes as to the meaning of the treaty should be settled by arbitration.

The Austrian people have still greater reason to be disgusted with this Moscow performance. But they have no alternative to patient waiting. The ugly fact is that the Kremlin is not willing to relinquish its military foothold in Austria because of its cold war with Marshal Tito in neighboring Yugoslavia and the continued unsettled conditions in the Balkans. Undoubtedly Tito would feel more secure if the Russian divisions in Austria should be withdrawn, and since Stalin has pulled out all the stops in his propaganda war with Tito it is not to be supposed that the big dictator will allow the little dictator any such comfort. Austria is a victim of the Communist schism as well as cold war, and for the time being neither logic, concessions nor diplomatic pressures can relieve her situation.

Concealed Weapons

The tragedy on Tuesday at Camden, N. J., where a homicidal maniac coldly and calmly killed 13 human beings and wounded three others with a Luger pistol, underscores the need for more general and stringent control of the distribution of such lethal weapons. It happens that The Washington Post of yesterday, which carried a detailed story of the disaster on page one, also, by coincidence, contained an editorial suggesting that the possession of pistols be controlled by police permits. No doubt this suggestion will be attacked, as others like it have been attacked in the past, by spokesmen for those who make a profit from the manufacture and sale of pistols—and attacked, we presume, on grounds of the loftiest abstractions about the right to bear arms.

It is true, of course, that the second amendment to the Constitution says, "A well-regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." The very language of the amendment attests its obsoleteness. It can scarcely be supposed today that the security of a free state depends upon private possession of a kind of weapon so dangerous to the personal security of its citizens. If this provision of the Constitution actually inhibits intelligent congressional action to regulate the possession of pistols, we suggest that it be modified by the prescribed constitutional process. However, the Supreme Court stated as long ago as 1897 in Robertson v. Baldwin that an act of Congress which prohibits the carrying of concealed weapons does not violate this amendment. We hazard the conjecture that even broader legislative action, if confined to concealed weapons, that is to pistols, would be valid.

It is senseless to allow, without any restriction, the purchase and possession of pistols by persons having no legitimate or rational use for them. Pistols, as we have said before, are not sporting equipment; they are used only, either by intent or perhaps even more frequently by accident, to snuff out human life. They lie about in incalculable numbers, brought into the country by veterans from abroad or manufactured here and offered for easy purchase, waiting for some mental incompetent to run amuck with them or for needless tragedy to flow from the handling of them by children or by momentarily angered adults or by criminals. Effective control can be only on a national basis. We believe it should be instituted by Congress speedily and stringently to put an end to tragedies which, on a less shocking scale than the disaster at Camden, occur every day.

Caribbean Intervention

Although it is considerably less flamboyant than the recent complaint by the Dominican Republic, the United States note to the Inter-American Peace Commission confirms the existence of threats to peace in the Caribbean. In citing the various unsuccessful excursions of the now-dwindling Caribbean Legion, the American note calls attention to underlying and more serious conflicts between Caribbean countries. The effect of these tensions is reflected in greater expenditures for armaments and more rigorous measures of internal control, both of which hinder economic improvement. Here, in the State Department's own work, is proof of the folly of any plan to saddle arms on Latin America.

The State Department deserves credit for initiating the inquiry into conditions in the Caribbean. However, the method adopted by the peace commission, that of querying all 21 American Republics before taking action, seems unnecessarily cumbersome. It is firsthand knowledge that is wanted. There is always a danger, in so drawn-out a proceeding, that the inquiry will die from lack of interest.

Actually, conditions in the Caribbean are the outcropping of a discord throughout Latin America. One of the symptoms is the growth of a double standard of international morality, one which holds that unilateral intervention is permissible so long as it is for a "good cause." This is particularly evident in the failure of several governments to suppress the freebooting expeditions of the Caribbean Legion against the Trujillo government of the Dominican Republic. Such failure amounts to tacit encouragement of intervention, and it invites retaliation. It is, moreover, a violation of the 1928 Havana Convention which pledges individual governments not to harbor invasionary forces.

The Caribbean threat, to be sure, is no more serious than the spread of military juntas in Latin America. Both conditions require the same remedy—a genuine collective policy of action by the American states. Unilateral action by one government in recognizing a military junta can cause very nearly as much trouble as support for an invasion. It is time to establish a common and binding policy on de facto recognition of new regimes. The counterpart of such a policy is a redefinition of the phrase "nonintervention"—a phrase which has become an emotional fixation with many persons in Latin America even though nonintervention as a policy is one of the most insidious and self-defeating forms of intervention.

What is needed is a frank recognition that while unilateral intervention is to be condemned, collective intervention by the body of American states is a necessary instrument for maintaining the peace and protecting the integrity of popular governments.

Age Of Burlesque

The death of Abraham Minsky serves to remind us of the once highly popular form of theatrical entertainment which, though not yet wholly extinct, seems destined to disappear like the blackface minstrel show and the pantomime. Minsky was the last great entrepreneur of burlesque, or as it was better known among its patrons and performers, the "burleycue." The word in its original usage might have applied to almost any broad and farcical performance of a satirical nature—such, for example, as Attic Old Comedy; but in the United States for the last 50 or 60 years it has designated a special and almost stereotyped exhibition of which the staple features are (1) a very coarse and ribald humor, (2) female anatomy, formerly a more mysterious matter than now, and (3) what might in a liberal and broadminded spirit be called singing and dancing. The audiences were almost exclusively male, and by attending one or two such performances a college sophomore could, at a relatively slight expense, get himself a reputation as a devil of a fellow.

At one time there were dozens and dozens of burlesque companies simultaneously touring the country. Perhaps the most famous, and certainly the most decorous, were those of the old Columbia Circuit. The Columbia shows specialized in embonpoint, and the matronly ladies of its choruses were remarkable for all those points of conformation that their granddaughters and great-granddaughters are trying desperately to avoid. By present-day standards, whether of the stage or of the street, most of them would seem fantastically overdressed. Still, the standard costume, which included close fitting tights of the sort then worn by the more artistic sort of ballet dancers, was considered in those days rather risque, and it was doubtless thus that many a palpitating adolescent discovered that legs were not an exclusive possession of his own sex.

What appears to have destroyed this earlier form of the burlesque show were the musical revues like the Ziegfeld Follies, the Passing Show and George White's Scandals. In a sense, of course, the revues were merely a more luxurious and sensuous form of burlesque shows, with younger choruses, fewer tights and more bare flesh, better music, and a sense of intimacy produced by the construction of ramps or runways that permitted the girls in certain numbers to mingle with the audiences, and all made respectable by less dilapidated theaters and higher prices of admission. Moreover, many of the famous comedians of the revues were graduates of the burlesque stage, among them Bert Williams, Frank Tinney and Bert Lahr.

In the face of this competition, and the further competition of the new cabarets and night clubs, burlesque seemed doomed. It was only by outdoing the revues that it earned a reprieve. This was the great era of Minsky, who apparently had more of the puritanical inhibitions of the Billy Watson days. The principal innovation was the strip tease, whereby a female performer making her appearance fully clothed gradually discarded her garments to a point where, had she been rather younger and prettier, she might have qualified for one of the "artistic tableaux" in the musical revues. The allusions and doubles entendres in the jokes of the comedians grew more and more reckless, until in the end the thing was too much for even the well seasoned stomach of Broadway, and there was no great objection when the late Mayor LaGuardia cleaned the new-style burleycue out of New York for good. It lingers, however, in a few provincial and out of the way places like Miami, Havana, and Washington, D. C.

Teamwork

An AFL union representing 2400 employes of Wanamaker's department store (New York City) has launched an advertising campaign at its own expense to increase store sales. The explanation of this unique experiment is that the union members realize they cannot prosper unless their employer prospers, too. Everyone knows that a business which is losing custom is not a good employer: dismissals and wage cuts are the inevitable result of shrinking profits or actual deficits. But, with few exceptions, the average union seldom gives a practical demonstration of its interest in the maintenance of prosperous conditions in the industries and businesses on which its members depend for their livelihood. Too often, indeed, unions follow the short-sighted policy of making excessive demands that, if granted, would put the employer out of business or at least force him to reduce the scale of operations at the expense of his employes.

Undoubtedly the Wanamaker unionists are hoping that the increased business that their unsolicited advertising campaign may bring the company will improve their chances for wage increases when new contracts are being negotiated. But they have at any rate shown by their actions that they realize that what a man earns depends not simply upon what he thinks he ought to get, but upon what the employer can afford to pay. By helping Wanamaker to get more custom, the union is laying a foundation for business expansion that will provide more jobs and steadier work for Wanamaker employes.

Hoffman's Advice

Mr. Hoffman, the administrator of Marshall aid, rightly says that we need "higher productivity plus vigorous imaginative and skillful merchandising"; he may not, however, realize to the full how our political, bureaucratic and trade union masters stand, like an iron curtain, between him and those who are eager to follow his sound advice.

What can the workman do, whose every movement is governed by trade union rules? If he fails to drop his tools before the clock strikes he is liable to be regarded as a blackleg; the healthy spirit of competition is smothered in the interests of "security" and "full" employment, with the natural result that in many cases productivity has been halved. The welfare state does not pretend to encourage personal endeavor.

Manufacturers and traders ask for nothing better than the liberty to employ "vigorous imaginative and skillful merchandising"; but does Mr. Hoffman know that no salesman can give a firm date for delivery and every quotation must be qualified to provide for the unforeseeable vagaries of control.

Our business classes—bereft of power, forbidden to use imagination outside a cramping "framework"; with more machinery and more labor than ever producing half as much for double pay; with native and foreign bureaucrats inspecting and obstructing every move; with the whole risk of loss to set against a small fraction of possible profits—have indeed done marvels. Mr. Hoffman's "superb" was none too high a compliment. But how much more could be done, given the liberty without which "vigorous imaginative and skillful merchandising" is utterly impossible? Common Currency

The dollar shortage, which is crippling to Canada and Britain, can be cured by the political solution which was adopted in the United States in 1788 and in Canada in 1867.

In 1787 the then existing treaty of amity and friendship between the 13 separate American States was found to be inadequate. Each State printed its own currency and a number of them faced bankruptcy.

In 1788 this situation was changed almost overnight by the adoption of a Constitution which created a single nation out of the 13 States and gave to Congress power to establish a common currency. The result was a currency which was used equally by the fishermen of Maine and the cotton plantations of Virginia.

Similarly, Section 91 (14) of the British North America Act of 1867 gives to the Parliament of Canada exclusive authority over "currency and coinage." The result is that the Canadian dollar is current in all provinces and is the sole medium of exchange.

The solution of our present currency problem is not to be found in restrictions of imports or in the devaluation of the pound or in an increase in the price of gold. These are palliatives. The shortage of dollars, which is part of the price of nationality, can be cured by the union of the countries of the sterling, dollar and other areas under a federal constitution which will create a parliament of the union elected by the people of the new state with exclusive authority to establish a common currency for the union. Union is the road to peace and prosperity.

Barsov's Fate

Lieut. Anatol Barsov realizes as well as do many exiles in Siberia that few persons repent their sins to the Kremlin without prejudice.

It is not inconceivable that the Pirogov-Barsov incident is merely another planned part of the continuing Soviet scheme to thwart the good aims of citizen-level international understanding fostered by UNESCO and the State Department.

Recently, there appeared in Pravda a series of articles which purported to give an accurate account of present-day life in the United States. Actually, the articles emphasized the seamy side in support of previous Soviet propaganda jabs at our admitted shortcomings. No clear image was given of what makes America great and superior.

The Barsov case falls nicely into this pattern.

When Anatol Barsov returns to his Mother Russia, it will not be surprising if he is sent around the country in person and over the radio to destroy the image of a rich, fertile, and happy America that has plagued the Kremlin—especially since 1945.

Teachers' Expenses

Existing income tax statutes deny teacher anad student alike any legitimacy of deductible expense in developing or furthering earning capacity through education. For example, thousands of teachers who are now exhausting their previous school term savings by attending summer school, to help do a better job, or in anticipation of future benefit to their earning capacity, will be privileged to claim no part of this expense as legitimate deductions from their gross incomes.

What indignation must come to a teacher's mind when he reads, as described in a recent issue of The Washington Post, of Maragon's expense account, including such items as "Entertainment, source of supply, $635!" This item, having the implication of business connection, would presumably be a perfectly legitimate basis for deductible claim under Federal income tax regulations.

It would not matter that a businessman, in a similar instance, would fill his own stomach in the bargain of wining and dining in his employer's interest—that would be all right with the tax collector; but, if a student or teacher should receive any incidental culture in the pursuit of earning capacity through education, he must dismiss any notion of including related expenses as deductible items of his tax return.

Economic Union With Britain

Though the United States tariff barriers have been lately reduced to their 1914 level, they are still very high, and most British products are unable to surmount them. If, however, the entire British Commonwealth and the United States were to combine in one single customs and monetary union the exchange of goods and services throughout this immense territory would come to depend exclusively on price and quality.

Not that the dollar should be adopted as the common legal tender, but an entirely new currency should be issued, superseding and displacing both the pound and the dollar. It should be valid and freely transferable throughout this newly constituted economic union. It should be backed by the combined gold reserves, present and future, of all participants.

Some of these economists who recently examined the implications of the establishment of a British-American currency union, though acknowledging its fundamental desirability, were apprehensive lest Great Britain might become, within this union, a sort of depressed area, and asserted that the Southern States of the American Union received at present large hidden subventions through paying less taxes and receiving manifold other benefits from the Federal Government. Federal taxation is uniform in all 48 States. In the American union the standard of living of any citizen entirely depends on merit and exertion. This would equally apply to every citizen of Great Britain, the dominions and the colonies within the British-American economic union.

The creation of a common currency would not of itself make people any richer or poorer in money at once, but freedom would be secured, new opportunities opened, mobility granted, markets enlarged, and enterprise enhanced. All this would lead to a happier life in general and ultimately to higher standards of material prosperity.

A common currency would enable British firms to apply in the United States for private loans, since such loans could be both granted and repaid in the same currency. These loans would help British industry to replenish its war-torn equipment and, by lowering its costs of production, to increase its sales and its exports.

With stable currency as an indispensable prerequisite, a major and long-term American investment program in Great Britain, the dominions, and the colonies would become possible, and even probable. For the export of capital requires, as a primary condition, confidence in the currency of the countries to which it is exported. Foreign investors will hardly run the risk of having their capital locked up in the maze of exchange controls of borrowing countries.

The inhabitants of the commonwealth and the United States represent about one third of mankind. If they form an economic union, the exchange of goods between them could be effected without hindrance or control. The questions of the balance of payments would no more arise between the participant states than they arise today between England and Wales or between Pennsylvania and California.

Though it is well known that all states are inordinately jealous of both their national sovereignty and their gold reserves, it is recommended that these questions should be considered henceforth under a more liberal and enlightened aspect. As Bacon has already observed: "He that will not apply new remedies must expect new evils." Those who would readily dismiss the remedy here suggested would do well to understand that the only remaining alternative is a still more aggravated economic crisis, which, in its cumulative effects and in its ultimate consequences might shake the world to its deepest foundations.

Dodging The British Crisis

By Malvina Lindsay

No Place To Hide

YOU DON'T want to think about the British money crisis. You don't want to read about it. That stuff about dollar and sterling areas is out of your line. And you simply can't stand hearing any more of this transatlantic name calling, this childish whining by Senators and MPs about who's to blame. Since you can't do anything, why worry?

"You may have to worry later," says your friend just back from Europe, "when this thing comes closer to your own pocketbook, maybe your own skin."

Oh, it's serious enough, you admit, even to this country. Maybe it's just that you've gotten calloused and tired, have joined the crisisphobes and are trying to find a sandpile for your head.

"Most of us and most of the British are in that kindergarten mood," says your friend. "That's why there may be a lot of hard waking up on both sides of the Atlantic a few months from now."

You're willing to grant that, but the subject is so dull. No human interest——

"What!" exclaims your friend. "No human interest in the Jibbets family in London! If you could just see those tow-headed children——"

Now, now, you remonstrate, she's going to tell you how shining and healthy they are. And if Britain's bankruptcy would shut off what milk and orange juice they get, you'd of course be sorry."

"NO," SAYS your friend, "the point is that the Jibbets children who have a fairly healthy start in life and the opportunity for education their parents lacked, are a symbol of the British people's new aspiration. If Britain goes broke, what becomes of those children's future? What happens to the Jibbets family if rations are suddenly cut again, food prices rise, unemployment goes up, wages go down?"

"You see," she continues, "Jibbets was one of those young Britons reared in squalor himself who came back from six years of battles and prison camps determined that his children should have a better chance than he had. Remember that in prewar days the average weekly wage of the industrial worker was $11.20 in our money. Now it's $25. Young Jibbets probably gets about $30. The family lives austerely in an old house—it hasn't got one of the laborers' dream houses you hear so much about. Even if the Jibbetses had more money to spend, they'd still have to get by on a meager ration of meat and with butter only at occasional meals. But they're looking to tomorrow as something more than a miserable existence."

But, you inquire, what about all those workers' luxuries, including free wigs, that Americans talk about?

"I'm willing to grant," concedes your friend, "that the Labor government has tried to do some things too fast. But I do know that the Jibbets children will have their teeth when they're 30, which probably wouldn't have been so in prewar days. However, Britain has avoided a revolution. It has peacefully opened up new vistas to those having a squalid existence. And as I have traveled in some other countries and seen the extremes of wealth and poverty, I've shuddered at what this portends for future peace."

BUT, YOU point out, the average American doesn't think of this when he blames socialism for Britain's troubles.

"Nor does he think," says your friend, "of how two world wars, one fought on her home soil, have exhausted Britain's resources of men and riches."

What's more, you add, the average American will tell you he's more concerned with the Johnson children over here than the Jibbets children in London.

"And what," asks your friend, "will happen to the Johnson children if some way isn't found to keep Britain on her feet, and to avoid an economic break with the United States? More markets will be closed to our goods, with attendant unemployment. But what would a rift between the countries mean in a wider sense? Failure of the European Recovery Program, a breakdown of the whole Atlantic defense system, imperiling the human freedom for which the Western world stands. The world would grow steadily more hazardous for the Johnson children, more expensive in terms of armaments and world responsibility for their parents.

"What is really at stake in these financial talks," she explains, "is the cementing of the first two bricks in building the peace of the world. A strongly united United States and Britain could do a lot to stave off war until world peace forces are strengthened. Whatever the cost of such a unity to both of us, it would be piddling compared with the alternative."

Today and Tomorrow

White Paper: Wedemeyer, Marshall

THE WEDEMEYER proposals and the decision of Secretary Marshall to reject them are still of the first importance to an understanding of the American problem in China, and indeed in many other countries as well. To assist Chiang's Nationalist government in the war with Japan and in the civil war with the Chinese Communists, the United States has sent five missions headed by distinguished soldiers. First there was General Stilwell, who was recalled at Chiang's request and replaced by General Wedemeyer. Then there was General Marshall, who was recalled at his own request. Then there was a second Wedemeyer mission in the summer of 1947. This produced the report and the recommendations which were suppressed until they were published in the White Paper. And after Wedemeyer there was General Barr.

Lippmann

ON THE prospects of Chiang and his government, the judgment of all the generals was the same. None thought that Chiang would win, all were convinced that Chiang was losing, the civil war. Marshall's estimate supported Stilwell's and Wedemeyer's supported Marshall's and Barr's report confirmed the estimate. The generals differed, however, on what to do about Chiang. Stilwell's conclusion was that we should abandon him if he continued to refuse to take our advice. Wedemeyer's conclusion—which we must examine more fully—was that we should take charge of the Chinese government and of the civil war. Marshall's decision, made as Secretary of State, was that we could not abandon Chiang but that neither could we take over his powers, his responsibilities, and his liabilities.

Thus Chiang's defeat, which we could not prevent, from which we could not disentangle ourselves, became an American defeat. For more than two years we have been lashed to the mast of a ship which we could not steer, which was headed for the rocks.

THERE HAS been much misunderstanding of the Wedemeyer report. It was supposed to be a plan for giving Chiang some, but not an enormous amount of, arms and money and some friendly military and technical advice. But now that the report is available, and with it a summary of the tremendous indictment of Chiang's government which General Wedemeyer delivered at a secret meeting of the Nationalist leaders, there is no further excuse for thinking that General Wedemeyer thought that China could be saved from communism by any of the small and well-intentioned measures which Chiang's partisans in Congress have advocated.

The Wedemeyer proposals rested on three postulates: One, that a Communist China would threaten the "strategic security" of the United States; two, that the Nationalist government, though anti-Communist, was so "corrupt, reactionary and inefficient" that it could not hope to win the civil war; and three, that, nevertheless, "the only working basis on which national Chinese resistance could be revitalized is through the presently (italics mine) corrupt, reactionary, and inefficient government of Chiang Kai-shek.

HOW THEN did General Wedemeyer propose to make this incompetent and hated government the chosen instrument, or as he put it, "the only working basis," of opposition to the Chinese Communists and their Soviet allies? Not by voting some more money and sending another military mission to do what General Stilwell and General Wedemeyer himself had tried and had failed to do.

General Wedemeyer's answer to the question was couched in the traditional language of diplomacy. But though the words do not call a spade a spade, the meaning—as Secretary Marshall testified later—was plain enough. General Wedemeyer advised the President not merely to underwrite but to take charge of the Nationalist government and of the civil war. The United States was to offer unlimited aid if and when Chiang invited the United States to send American "advisers" to run his government, to purge it, to reform it, to manage the Chinese economy, and to equip and to lead his armies.

General Wedemeyer's estimate of Chiang's government was so low that he wished that government openly to confess its bankruptcy as a sovereign power by accepting a partition of its territory and by asking for an American protectorate. So low was his estimate of the capacity of the Chiang regime to exercise Chinese sovereignty that he recommended the abandonment of Manchuria to "a five power guardianship" with Soviet Russia one of the guardians, and the assumption by the United States, through the euphemistic formula of "advisers", of the paramount power in the rest of China. Then he wished to use the bits and pieces of Chiang's regime to put together a new Chinese government which, as our chosen instrument, was to make Chinese reconstruction an American responsibility and the Chinese civil war an American war.

SECRETARY Marshall understood well enough what the Wedemeyer proposal really meant and where it led. At an executive session of the congressional committees in February, 1948, he made formal statement which is now published for the first time in the White Paper (page 380). Without mentioning the Wedemeyer report by name he talked about the proposal, saying that "the present government evidently cannot reduce the Chinese Communists to a completely negligible factor in China. To achieve that objective in the immediate future, it would be necessary for the United States to underwrite the Chinese government's military effort, on a wide and probably increasing scale, as well as the Chinese economy. The United States would have to be prepared virtually to take over the Chinese government and administer its economic, military and governmental affairs . . ." This would represent "a burden on the United States economy and a military responsibility which I cannot recommend as a course of action for this Government."

THE ABIDING significance of the Wedemeyer-Marshall chapter is in the disclosure that the conduct of our foreign policy had led us—in China at any rate—into a tragic predicament. We were left with a choice between the Wedemeyer partition plus protectorate and a posture of humiliating impotence. These had become, in Mr. Acheson's words, the "only alternative."

We are bound to say, I think, that when he was faced with the intolerable choice, Secretary Marshall chose the lesser of the two evils. Though he could not save China or save American interests and prestige in China, he did save this country from a hopeless, a reckless, and an infinitely dangerous adventure.

BUT THERE remains the question of the highest significance for our whole foreign policy—the question of how and why we were trapped in this awful dilemma.

Parliament Of Europe

By Andre Visson

Economic Unity Must Come First

STRASBOURG.—I arrived at Strasbourg for the opening of the first European Parliament, after two months of traveling in western Europe, western Germany included. During those two months the British economic and financial crisis had been casting an ever darker shadow on Europe's skies.

In every European country to which I went I heard growing concern expressed over the British crisis—and especially over the attitude of the British Labor government toward it. In every country I heard European statesmen solemnly declare that Europe's alternative was "to unite or to perish," but in every country I heard bitter complaints about the discouraging lack of progress on the road toward the much-talked-about political and economic integration of western Europe.

The British were not alone to be held responsible for this lack of progress. But in every continental country they were blamed for their attitude which rendered any progress impossible within the Organization for European Economic Cooperation in Paris.

As to Germany, the nationalistic outbursts of the anti-Allied feelings during the pre-election campaign reminded those who were willing to forget it that, under the thin veneer of "imported democratization," most of the Germans still stuck to the belief that "Nazism was a good idea badly executed."

It would have been difficult to have the European Consultative Assembly and the newly created Council of Europe hold their first session under more unfavorable auspices. And this made even more pathetic the faith of those European statesmen and parliamentarians who came to Strasbourg determined not to let themselves become discouraged by the formidable obstacles they had to overcome in their efforts to lay down a foundation for a federated western Europe.

SINCE THE days of the San Francisco Conference I have not seen a greater gathering of Europe's political talent. In certain ways Strasbourg was even more impressive than San Francisco. The Golden Gate city saw a greater number of official delegations from European countries, including the Soviet Union and her satellites. But in Strasbourg the 12 Foreign Ministers from western Europen and Mediterranean countries, accompanied by a score of their top experts and advisers, were outflanked by a hundred most outstanding parliamentarian representatives from their respective countries.

In San Francisco one heard only the official voices of European governments. In Strasbourg you could hear the voices of the free peoples of Europe. The members of the opposition parties spoke as loud—and when it came to Winston Churchill, much more eloquently—than the members of the government majorities.

The British Laborites were certainly not too popular in Strasbourg. European federalists could not forget that the British Labor government has stubbornly fought for more than a year all efforts of the French and Belgian governments to expand the authority of the first European Parliament. And Mr. Bevin succeeded in reducing it to a mere Consultative Assembly, all real authority remaining with the Council of Europe, composed of the Foreign Ministers.

But the representatives of free European nations in Strasbourg, led by Winston Churchill, rebelled against an absolute subordination of their activities to the whims of their Foreign Ministers. They showed that they would not accept reduction to the status of subordinate parts of their governments' consultants. And Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium, who, due to the change in the government coalition of his country, left the Belgian Foreign Office and Belgium's representation in the Council of Europe to become the first chairman of Europe's Consultative Assembly, had to deploy all his talent as a statesman known for his ability in finding a common denominator, to coordinate the natural aspirations of the European parliamentarians with the inevitable and often irritating cautiousness of the European governments.

ANOTHER striking feature of the Strasbourg assembly was the age of the most outstanding advocates of a European federation. Winston Churchill of Britain, Count Carlo Sforza of Italy, Edouard Herriot and Paul Reynaud of France are all over 70 years old. And other prominent European federalists like Paul Henri Spaak and Paul van Zeeland of Belgium are also on the other side of the 50s.

European federation is advocated not by young political leaders who may be easily carried away from the hard realities by a great and noble dream. It is passionately fought for by elderly European statesmen, who after a half century of political experience, have learned the hard way that their respective countries cannot any longer survive unless they create together a European community which will be stronger and healthier than Europe's present national states.

Unfortunately most of these great Europeans have been always thinking primarily in political terms. And Europe's federation sets up economic problems which are not only more important but more urgent and infinitely more complex than Europe's political problems.

The failure of the OEEC denounced by France's Paul Reynaud, the British economic and financial crisis and the American-British-Canadian talks in Washington made everybody in Strasbourg realize that unless Europeans succeed in finding urgently a basis for the indispensable economic cooperation, all their discussions about European federation will remain a strictly academic debate.

Washington Calling

By Marquis Childs

Eisenhower And '52

IN THIS politically conscious Capital the speech that Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower made before the American Bar Association in St. Louis has been subjected to searching analysis. What Eisenhower did in that speech, as is clearly recognized here, was to stake out for himself a middle ground between President Truman and Senator Robert A. Taft.

Childs

The background of that speech is as revealing as what Eisenhower told the lawyers at their national convention. It goes back to a meeting in Eisenhower's high-ceilinged office at Columbia University shortly before the general left on a long vacation that was to take him to remote Colorado trout streams and the kind of seclusion that he has rarely had since he returned from Europe.

The general's callers were a group of influential Republicans. They had come to tell Eisenhower their conclusion that he could get the Republican nomination for President and be elected President.

But—it was here that a certain solemnity, tension even, came into the conversation—they had a condition. This was that Eisenhower refrain from making statements or speeches with anything faintly resembling a political slant. In effect, the spokesman for the group said this:

"We'll elect you as a popular hero. It isn't necessary that they know what you think. Then after you're elected, we can proceed to do the things we have to do to get this country back on the right track."

THE GENERAL did not take this very well. He told his callers what he has so often said before—that politics, as politics, has no interest for him. But more than that, he resented the implication that he should be presented to the voters as a package with fancy wrappings to be opened only after election day.

Eisenhower replied that he believed in the middle ground between the extremes of Left and Right for America. And he would continue to try to define that middle ground no matter what the consequences. The invitation to address the bar association had already come. Eisenhower accepted with the realization that this would be an excellent forum before which to present his belief in the "middle road."

Prominent Republicans thinking of '52 are beginning to eye Eisenhower hopefully, undaunted by the memory of his firm "no" to all entreaties in 1948. This is true especially of those who distrust the isolationism of Taft and the powerful wing of the party that Taft dominates.

Launched on an intensive stumping tour of Ohio that will take him up almost until Christmas, Taft worked against the North Atlantic Pact and he is expected to lead the opposition to granting funds for arms to implement the pact. Taft also has made himself the symbol of opposition to organized labor. And, as President Truman made clear in his Labor Day speech at Pittsburgh, the Taft-Hartley Act will be a fighting issue for some time to come.

WHETHER Eisenhower would be willing to run in '52 is a question no one, certainly not the general himself, would answer positively at this point. In my opinion, his willingness or unwillingness will depend largely on two things.

Eisenhower's first concern would be whether the Republican candidate would be likely to try to take the country back to isolationism. He has an unshakable belief in the need to cooperate with the free nations of the West, and particularly Great Britain, in order to preserve individual freedom in the world. That, Eisenhower told the lawyers in St. Louis, is our most precious possession.

When he took part in the secret Blair House conference on the question of sharing atomic know-how with Great Britain, Eisenhower was deeply disturbed by the attitude of some Senators who expressed a grudging resentment at the suggestion that Britain was a trusted partner so far as the atomic project was concerned. This seemed to him to reflect a return to the hopeless, dead-end isolationism of the past.

Eisenhower's second concern would be over an irrevocable cleavage between political extremes that would seem to be splitting America along class and alien lines. If the contest three years from now should seem to be moving in that direction, I believe General Ike would feel he had a duty to stand for the validity of the "middle road." In that position he would become a formidable candidate.

Russian Veto Keeps Nepal Out of U. N.

Lake Success, Sept. 7 (AP).—Russia used the big power veto for the 31st time today to block Nepal's bid for U. N. membership.

The security council vote was 9 to 2, with only Russia and the Soviet Ukraine voting against the little Asian country.

Council President Sir Alexander Cadogan of Britain announced that Nepal's application failed to win approval since one of the five big powers voted against it.

Out of the 31 votoes invoked by Russia, 15 were used on membership applications. Countries previously vetoed include Italy, Austria, Ireland, Hashemite Jordan, Finland, Korea and Ceylon.

Soviet Delegate Semyon K. Tsarapkin said he was not opposed to the admission of Nepal, but that he felt it would be unjust to vote for Nepal as long as Albania, Romania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Outer Mongolia were kept out by the council. These five Soviet satellites have been unable so far to get the seven affirmative votes needed for approval.

Cadogan and U. S. Delegate Warren R. Austin contended that each country should be considered on its own merits.

The council will meet again Friday to reconsider all the other membership applications previously turned down.

President Gets Gift Of 48 Gay Neckties

President Truman received 48 gaily decorated neckties yesterday, the gift of Myron H. Acherman, president of the Men's Tie Foundation.

They included several hand-painted four-in-hands, one bearing the insignia of the President's old World War I division. Another portrays Mr. Truman playing the piano for a dancing donkey and elephant, which are leading a Russian bear on a leash.

As he was leaving the White House, Ackerman mentioned that national tie week begins September 11.

Indoor Igloo Romance Cited in Paternity Suit

New York, Sept 7 (U.P.).—Police searched today for an Arctic explorer charged with fathering the baby daughter of a young advertising writer he met in an igloo.

The girl, Lucille Saunders, 27, said she met David Irwin, 40, last November in an igloo exhibit in a department store. Her baby was born August 21.

Her paternity suit charged that Irwin lied when he told her he was single. She quoted him as saying, "I'm married to my dogs."

Irwin, who once made a 2000-mile trek to the Magnetic pole with only his violin and dog team for company, is believed living with his wife in Dingmans Ferry, Pa.

Montreal, Sept. 7 (U.P.).—A new chemical discovery may reduce North America's dependence on Europe—including Russia, for manganese, the vital mineral used to strengthen iron and steel, it was disclosed today.

Paraplegic Veterans Housing Bill Signed

President Truman yesterday signed into law a bill liberalizing the statute under which paraplegic veterans receive Government help in building specially-designed homes.

The new act provides that the Government may pay half of the cost of the home, with the Federal share not to exceed $10,000. The program will aid about 2000 veterans during its first year at an estimated cost of 20 million dollars.

'Aggressor' Army Crosses Danube

Nuernberg, Germany, Sept. 7 (AP).—United States constabulary troops, greenclad "aggressors" in American fall maneuvers in Germany, threw a spearhead across the Danube River tonight north of Munich.

Two thousand aggressor infantrymen stormed across the river in a swift, smokescreened attack that caught the defending First Division by surprise.

They held their beachhead despite a mythical battering of their air support by B-50 bombers called from English bases to aid the defense in the maneuvers staged jointly by the Army, Navy and Air Force. A total of 110,000 men of the three services are involved.

The defenders' air support from England caught the aggressors' air power like sitting ducks. Umpires here ruled that a flight of 6 to 10 B-50s knocked out 50 per cent of the aggressor's fighter plane strength.

The initial issue consists of 18,000 shares of Class A and 72,000 shares of Class B common stock, each with $1 par value. The stock is priced at $15 a unit, consisting of one share of Class A and four shares of Class B.

Proceeds of $270,000, less underwriting discounts of $54,000, will furnish the company with working capital toward development of new types of computing machines.

President of the firm is Dr. Samuel Lubkin, electrical engineer and consultant at the National Bureau of Standards on mathematical, logical and engineering phases of electronic digital computers.

First project of the firm, according to the prospectus, will be the assembly of a machine "containing about 1200 vacuum tubes and 6000 germanium crystals as well as a miscellaneous group of other electrical and mechanical components." This machine, occupying 50 square feet of space and about 7 feet high, will be designed to solve complex mathematical problems in rapid time.

Admittedly "a new venture in a new field," the stock is offered to the public as a speculation.

BARGAINS: Close-out of the 690 million dollars' worth (acquisition cost) of war-surplus plants still in Government hands is planned by the War Assets Administration, Business Week reports. The magazine says that the goal is to sell or lease them all by year's end. "WAA has been selling plants at fixed percentages of estimated fair value; good ones recently have brought around 40 cents on the original dollar cost," says the publication. "Now, there will be no floor under the price the Government will accept. It will take whatever it can get in today's market."

Menotti's Unique 'Evening' Follows Joke With Horror

By Richard L. Coe
Post Reporter

FOR THE backbone of his two musical plays, "The Medium" and "The Telephone," at Olney this week, Gian Carlo Menotti has dipped into the half forgotten Grand Guignol of Paris.

This Montmartre theater had a long vogue with its programs of one-act plays, the curtain raiser a farce, the chef d'oeuvre of the evening as fearfully terrifying as authors could conjure. About 25 years ago New York had a season of them.

This scheme of light humor and the clammy chiller is what the author-composer has given us in his widely praised and unusual theatrical evening. To this he has added music completely inseparable from his plan and which Mr. Hume discusses in the adjacent column. To separate the music from the words is a foolishness which neither the music critic nor I presume to attempt.

The program begins with "The Telephone," a frivolous dialogue about a young man whose proposal of marriage is constantly put off by the chattering slave and arch-interrupter of civilization, the telephone. It is a very slight joke stretched to its limit, but pleasant.

"The Medium," in two acts, relates how one of those harpies of death is trapped by her own tricks. When she actually does feel an icy hand at her throat, her mind is shattered and ultimately she murders her mute assistant, a gypsy lad she picked off the streets of Budapest.

Marie Powers Stars

Horror is the kernel of this piece—an eerie seance, her child-like daughter, her dumb assistant, her pathetic clients, a chilling scene in which she whips the mute boy, his efforts to steal back to her daughter, the final scene in which she shoots the quivering lad behind the curtain.

To develop his music and to allow for variety, Menotti varies the moods of his play; sometimes it is sardonic, other times philosophical, others poignant, others sheer melodrama. None of the points is as fully developed as might be were this a spoken drama of character study, but all are effectively touched.

The value of Menotti's 2½-year-old evening lies in the close fusion of drama and music in a language the audience understands. "Amelia Goes to the Ball" and "The Old Maid and the Thief" led the composer's way for "The Medium," and, considering its brilliant success, his shortly-to-be-produced "The Consul," about refugees of the present, should be an event.

Marie Powers is superb as "The Medium." Apart from her considerable voice, she is an actress of force, drawing the women in sure, broad strokes of character. She has made Mme. Flora a modern classic, which leaves little further to be said.

The part of the mute boy, Toby, is in equally effective hands. Leo Coleman's dumb show of the youth's varied moods is so movingly conveyed by dance and facial expression that one questions whether or not the man can speak. Evelyn Keller's daughter is ably acted and the others of the cast are equal to their unusual assignments.

The Olney is to be thanked for giving Washingtonians the opportunity to visit the Menotti entertainment. It is a unique switch for a summer theater, this evening of belated discovery.

Startling Singing Of Marie Powers A Highlight

By Paul Hume
Post Reporter

GIAN CARLO MENOTTI'S two operas, "The Telephone" and "The Medium" make such good sense.

Don't think that every opera heard today makes sense. In plot, staging, and even in music, some of the operas we hear most often today do not make sense. At least they do not make it by any such apposite relation between dramatic situation, text and music.

Where else, except in Wagner, do we find so perfect a marriage of composer's musical intentions and librettist's use of words? For Menotti is the first succesful opera composer since Wagner to write both words and music for his own stage works.

But the sensibleness of Menotti's operas, heard to such advantage in the intimate space of the Olney Theater, crops up in the intelligent use of singable English, the use of a theater smaller than the Metropolitan or Chicago Civic for an art that rarely needs such dimensions, and the adaptability of the accompaniment.

The singers this week are supported by two pianos. To a composer-pianist of Menotti's gifts, this is no limitation but a chance to provide different but highly appropriate color in his score.

The musical substance of these two scores is familiar. Vocal lines reminiscent of Puccini are the rule. The music moves from mood to mood as the gay, vacuous soprano of "The Telephone" gives place before Marie Powers' massive enunciation of Madam Flora.

Radio and phonograph records have made these operas familiar to many. They should become standard repertoire for all operagoers. They combine the theatrical tension of "Carmen" or "Butterfly" with the lyric appeal of "Boheme." Their eloquent use of English makes them constantly understandable.

The singing of the protagonist in "The Medium" is startling. Marie Powers colors her voice from a high whine to a deep, chest-fed stream of contralto sound. She makes words live and breathe, and she sings tremendous climaxes. She creates a great operatic character through the strength of her sung action.

Evelyn Keller is a brilliant foil to the lower voice. Her soprano is easily handled and her sense of timing in her tenderness toward both her mother and the mute Toby is echoed in her acute sensitivity to her text. Loren Welch doubles as Ben in "The Telephone" and Mr. Gobineau in "The Medium." Effective in both, he is an artist in the older part. His voice is beautiful in quality and use.

Derna De Lys and Dorothy Staiger were excellent bereaved mothers. In "The Telephone," Edith Gordon made her light soprano brittle almost to the point of unpleasantness. The more straightforward her assignment became, the less she controlled it. If she is interested in acting, I leave her to Mr. Coe. If she wants to be a singer, she has work to do.

All evening William McDermott and Sherman Frank played the pianos with style, top team work and consideration for the singers.

Madame Chiang Going to China, Newspaper Says

New York, Sept. 7 (AP).—The New York Journal-American today said that Madame Chiang Kai-shek is returning to China next month to stand by her generalissimo husband.

In an interview with David Sentner, Madame Chiang was quoted as saying:

"I am flying back next month. I believe the generalissimo needs me."

Asked if she would go to the fighting front with him, she replied:

"I will go wherever he goes."

The news story also quoted her as saying:

"I shall also carry home the message that China has many friends in America who would like to help her in her hour of need."

Philadelphia Building Fire Is Like Volcano

Philadelphia, Sept. 7 (AP).—A burning building erupted like a volcano in downtown Philadelphia today, hurling bricks and chunks of flaming wood for three blocks and setting off 15 different fires.

The blaze started in a vacant seven-story building on Sansom st., four blocks from City Hall, shortly before 9 a. m. (EST). The building was being razed for a midtown parking lot.

An hour later firemen said they had the fire under control.

But suddenly the walls of the empty building began to buckle and break up.

Embers scattered in every direction. Bricks tumbled through the roofs of nearby buildings and peppered the streets.

Nearly three hours after the fire was under control, the roof of an adjoining three-story building housing Tilles', a well-known restaurant, collapsed with a crash heard for blocks.

Police closed Sansom Street between 11th and 12th to traffic "for several days." Remaining walls of the damaged buildings might collapse at any moment, officers said.

Most of the resulting blazes in other buildings were quickly extinguished.

Six firemen were injured, none seriously.

Expedition Fans Out in Search of Ark

Istanbul, Turkey, Sept. 7 (U.P.)—The American expedition seeking Noah's Ark fanned out today on the western slopes of 17,160-foot Mount Ararat in weather which led a Turkish correspondent to report, "we are freezing."

Aaron J. Smith of Greensboro, N. C., leader of the expedition called on his American and Turkish aides for a final effort to find the Biblical vessel before the winter snows begin—probably within a week.

Smith offered a cash prize to any Turkish guide who could find the Ark.

He said he planned to hunt the western slopes until Friday, despite freezing night temperatures and a shortage of water. A Turkish dispatch said the expedition had reached the 12,000-foot level—2000 feet above the point where Smith hoped to find the Ark.

Search of the northern slopes of Ararat last week resulted in failure.

7 Hurt in Bell Plant Picket Line Mixup

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Sept. 7 (U.P.).—At least seven persons were injured today in a mass union demonstration at the gates of the strike-bound Bell Aircraft Corp. plant, and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey ordered additional police deputized to cope with the "serious outbreak of lawlessness."

Intervening for the second time since 1800 production workers, members of the United Auto Workers (CIO), went on strike at Bell, Dewey ordered District Attorney William E. Miller to "prosecute vigorously all violations of law" at the plant, which has been closed for 13 weeks.

About 400 union members took part in today's demonstration. The company said six nonstriking employes were injured. One worker was cut on the face when a stick was thrown through the window of his automobile. Others were "roughed up" when they tried to cross the strengthened U.A.W. picket line.

In addition, Martin Gerber, regional director of the UAW, was injured when he fell from an automobile at the scene of the demonstration. He was taken to a nearby hospital.

The union is demanding higher wages.

Henry Becker, Niagara County sheriff, said he had several deputies at the plant "to cope with whatever situation arises."

"A serious outbreak of lawlessness occurred this morning in Niagara County," Dewey said. "An organized group became a mob, obstructed the free use of a highway and of passage for those trying to use it lawfully.

"I have directed the Niagara County sheriff to exhaust the powers and forces available to him and to deputize police reinforcements from neighboring communities.

"The district attorney has been directed to prosecute vigorously all violations of law. I am keeping in close touch with the situation. Violations and breaches of the peace must be suppressed."

On August 20, Dewey refused to call out National Guard troops to quell disorders at the plant. The troops had been requested by Lawrence D. Bell, company president. The governor, instead, instructed Sheriff Becker to deputize more men to maintain order.

Strikes Threaten 3 Railroads

Union Railroad, said the company has offered to submit the work rules dispute to arbitration.

The Union Railroad operates between all mills of U. S. Steel Corporation subsidiaries in the Pittsburgh district. The road also serves many other steel and fabricating plants.

The Monongahela, connecting railroad, with about 600 brotherhood members, serves Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. plants in Pittsburgh and nearby Aliquippa, Pa.

R. L. Barnes, president of Monongahela Connectng Railroad declared:

"There is no reason for this strike for it does not involve wages or working conditions."

Here in Washington Frank Douglass of the National Mediation Board told the Associated Press "we've given up entirely" trying to avert the Missouri Pacific strike.

"I think they're all set to have a strike," he said. "We've done everything we can under the law, and then some, trying to stop it and had no success. We've given up entirely now, and it looks like a strike."

Set to strike are 5000 members of the three brotherhoods and the Order of Railway Conductors. The road has announced that when the strike starts an additional 25,000 workers will be furloughed.

Traffic Embargo Friday

Railroad spokesmen said that a passenger, mail, baggage and express embargo will go into effect at 12:01 a. m. Friday, about 14 hours before the strike deadline. An embargo on freight, already is in effect.

Meanwhile, a presidential emergency board urged further negotiations to avert a threatened strike on the Southern Pacific road.

The board made its recommendations in a report to President Truman on its efforts to settle a dispute over union demands for new working rules.

Wants Demands Defined

Specifically, the board said the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen ought to spell out its demands for changes in the make-up of crews in road and yard service. The union has threatened to strike unless the demands are met.

The board told Mr. Truman "it is apparent that the parties have not exhausted bargaining as required by the Railway Labor Act."

Members of the board are Judge Robert G. Simmons of Nebraska, Leverett Edwards, Oklahoma industrial commissioner, and Attorney Frank M. Swacker of New York.

Bridges Demands Priority For Picketing Issue

New York, Sept. 7 (AP).—Longshoreman Leader Harry Bridges demanded today that picketing and "blacklisting" issues be settled before any general settlement of Hawaii's 130-day-old dock strike.

Bridges made the demands at the first meeting of CIO union and employer representatives with Cyrus S. Ching, head of the United States Conciliation and Mediation Service. The union is the International Longshoremen and Warehousemen's Union.

W. Russell Starr, chief management negotiator, said Bridges' stand will interfere with settlement of the dispute.

Neither Starr nor Ching would say, however, whether the chances of ending the strike were better or worse as a result of today's meeting.

Bridges, himself, left the closed session without speaking with newsmen.

Ching said Bridges brought up these issues in addition to the wage question which is at the root of the dispute:

1. Bridges objects to a contract provision which might be invoked to require ILWU members to cross picket lines under some circumstances.

2. Bridges demands that 1000 workers employed on the docks by the Hawaiian territorial government, which has seized the docks, shall not be employed by stevedoring companies in the future.

Starr said the second demand amounted to "blacklisting" and that employers were against it. He said the employers hold that neither issue can properly be discussed at this time under the existing contract, which does not expire until 1950.

"However, I guess we'll have to talk about them since Harry had brought them up," Starr added.

Ching said he would meet separately tomorrow with each side in the dispute.

"The program after that depends entirely on what takes place tomorrow," Ching said.

U. S. Tourist Disappears

the document at an aircraft manufacturers' conference at Williamsburg, Va., May 23-25. Later, when "Congressman Lyle" (apparently Representative John E. Lyle of Tex.) complained that a "red-headed lieutenant from Texas" was trying to "peddle" the document on Capitol Hill, Price said he ordered Inglis to find out who the lieutenant was.

The admiral added that he had told Kimball about this probe. This investigation, both Price and Inglis made plain, was under wraps, to avoid stirring up trouble on the Hill.

Admiral Inglis testified that because of Price's instructions not to approach any Congressman directly it was August before Naval Intelligence "tentatively identified the red-headed lieutenant from Texas as a Lieutenant Ingram." This identification was made, he said, only a few hours before Ingram's name was mentioned in the Congressional probe.

Capt. S. B. D. Wood, judge advocate member of the Navy court, said that Lieut. Samuel P. Ingram will be called as a witness today.

Glenn L. Martin, Baltimore plane builder, also may appear today. Earlier, Wood had told reporters that he wanted to call Martin but that his office reported he was "unavailable" and could not be reached for a week or 10 days.

Later the Martin company told Wood this was a telephone operator's mistake. Actually, the veteran aircraft manufacturer has been in Washington attending the All-American Amateur Baseball Association tournament of which he is the chairman, and knew nothing of the court's efforts to reach him.

Cedric R. Worth, suspended special assistant to Undersecretary Kimball, who admitted writing the now discredited anonymous memo, has testified that Martin gave him some of the information it contains and that he prepared it for the latter to give to Sen. Tydings (D., Md.). The Navy court is charged with determining who in the naval service other than Worth had anything to do with preparation of the document. Worth says he obtained data for it from others but no one else in the Navy knew what he was doing.

Inglis told the court his office first started an investigation about June 1, when two newspaper articles reported that the FBI and the Air Force were investigating the Navy to determine if naval men had written the smear paper. Such a probe would violate an agreement Government agencies have not to investigate each other, he said.

Then Price told him about the complaint of Congressman Lyle, the ONI chief testified.

"Admiral Price said he deplored the anonymous document and alleged Navy activity on the Hill," said Inglis, "and wanted to find out who was responsible and put a stop to it."

But ONI had definite instructions not to question Congressmen and no "full scale, unrestricted" probe was made, he added.

Wood asked him about the results of his probe of the reported FBI and Air Force investigation of the Navy.

"The results in general were completely negative," was the reply. "There was a categorical denial from the FBI and we could discover no evidence on the other, although a cooperative investigation into a related matter is now going on jointly by the Navy and Air Force."

Inglis did not explain the latter statement.

Kimball took the stand after Inglis had denied the Undersecretary had directed ONI to investigate the anonymous document. He said he wished to correct his statement before the House Armed Services Committee that he'd directed Inglis in April to look into the matter.

The first he'd heard of the document, Kimball said, was when Symington "told me a document attacking his integrity was circulating on Capitol Hill" and there were rumors that Navy men were behind it. The Undersecretary said he told Symington he'd tried to run this down, and had talked to Admiral Price about having Naval Intelligence investigate.

"Price said he'd not had too much luck checking leaks through that office but would talk to Inglis about it," Kimball added.

He also repeated his testimony before the congressional committee about asking Worth to look into Symington's complaint and the latter's suggestion that he might find out who was responsible if "immunity" were promised. This was impossible, he said, and the matter went no further.

Kimball also testified that he knew nothing of Worth's preparation of the memo until he admitted it publicly. He said he knew no one who had aided in the project.

Price told the court he had not ordered an ONI investigation of the source of the document—only of the identity of the "redhead from Texas"—because "about that time the gossip was that certain people knew who the author was," Symington, he added, was supposed to know.

He testified he had no knowledge of Worth's activity or of anyone else who may have been involved. Word of Worth's authorship of the document came as a "great shock" to him, Price said, for "I had the highest regard for him and so did everyone else in the Navy Department."

Capt. David L. McDonald, Kimball's naval aide, also was a witness. He said that Worth's official duties were to handle Kimball's public and Congressional relations and particularly to help prepare "presentations" for Senate and House committees and such groups as the Finletter and Brewster air policy committees.

Therefore, Worth was "acting properly" if he asked anyone in the Navy for classified information, and they were right in giving it to him.

McDonald said that, "as a friend" he had called Worth the night he admitted writing the document to "cheer him up."

"He was highly regarded at the Navy Department?" asked Wood.

"Yes, and still is,' answered McDonald.

"Because of his ability?"

"Right," said McDonald.

Comdr. W. E. Sweeney, who was a technical assistant in Kimball's office until July, testified that some of the information in the anonymous document apparently came from a classified memo he had given Worth last march. It dealt with a controversy within the Research and Development Board over the B-36, he said.

Sweeney declared he was a liaison officer with the board and believed he had asked Worth to report the matter to Kimball. Worth then asked him for a memo on the matter, which he prepared. He said he had no knowledge at all of the anonymous document.

Capt. J. L. Pratt, who was aide to Navy Assistant Secretary John Nicholas Brown when Worth was Brown's special assistant, said he selected the suspended official for the job from several candidates.

Charles W. Corddry, United Press aviation writer, also was a witness. He was questioned about a story which he had written—which aroused considerable controversy—saying the Air Force had selected 70 targets in Russia for atomic attack. The anonymous document said he'd been shown a top secret map by Air Force officials. Corddry denied this flatly.

Robeson Riot Violence Laid To Teen-Agers

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 7 (AP).—Teen-agers were responsible for most of the violence that occurred after Paul Robeson's concert near Peekskill Sunday, the Westchester County district attorney said today.

In a preliminary report to Governor Dewey, Prosecutor George M. Fanelli said his investigation indicated that "most of the damage and trouble came from teen-agers who had no connection with veteran groups."

Fanelli told the Governor that State and Westchester police had "accomplished an insuperable job of preventing fatalities."

He said the violence could be considered "secondary" to "what would have happened had the police failed to keep apart the opposing factions."

Dewey withheld comment pending receipt of additional reports from Westchester Sheriff Fred R. Ruscoe and John A. Gaffney, State police superintendent.

Fanelli did not refer to charges by Robeson Monday that police had assaulted concert-goers.

In Pittsburgh today, the Allegheny County American Legion announced it would ask the board of education to cancel its permit for a concert by Robeson there October 15.

"We want no Pittsburgh incident to be added to the Peekskill incidents," said George C. Dietrich, county commander of the Legion.

CIO Asks Riot Probe By 'Qualified' Group

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Sept. 7 (U.P.).—The executive board of the New York State CIO unanimously adopted a resolution late today condemning riots at the Robeson concerts in Peekskill and calling upon Gov. Thomas E. Dewey to appoint a "qualified" investigating committee.

"If our State administration persists in its efforts to conduct an investigation by whitewash by having the very local officials responsible for failure to enforce the law investigate their own laxity, it will encourage even more violent breaches of peace and denial of basic rights," the resolution said.

Singer Refuses to Debate Ex-White House Steward

Jersey City, N. J., Sept. 7 (U.P.).—Paul Robeson has rejected a challenge to debate communism versus Democrat with Bash Cruso, 77-year-old Negro who served as an assistant steward at the White House under three Presidents, it was revealed today.

Judge on Red-Aid Group Hits Press Attack 'Lies'

Sullivan, Ind., Sept. 7 (U.P.).—Circuit Judge Norval K. Harris, who served with singer Paul Robeson on a Communist aid committee, today charged he was a victim of "vicious lying and attacks from newspapers."

Harris, appointed cochairman with Robeson of a committee to raise funds for the defense of 11 Communists on trial in New York, said criticism would not stop his defense of "the civil liberties of the humblest citizens of the land."

Feeble-Minded Woman's Place Held to Be Jail

A 27-year-old feeble-minded woman, charged with soliciting prostitution has been in jail since May because court authorities can find no other institution which will keep her.

She is Mrs. Viola Smith Williams of Baltimore. She has a mental age of five years and nine months, Municipal Court authorities were told yesterday.

For four months, the Probation Office of the court has been seeking to have her admitted to an institution for the feeble-minded, but residence requirements have prevented it.

Mrs. Smith was arrested here last March on vagrancy and soliciting prostitution charges. When she told the authorities that she was born in 1942, Judge Thomas D. Quinn committed her to Gallinger Hospital for a mental examination.

The report showed that she has no mental disease but is feeble-minded. Judge Quinn then ordered the probation office to find an institution for her.

The probation office reported yesterday that District authorities said Mrs. Williams could not be admitted to the District Training School because she had not resided here for a year. Maryland authorities said they needed more definite proof that she was a resident of that State.

Judge Quinn said he knew of no solution. He had the case continued for trial later this month and ordered the probation officer to continue trying to find Mrs. Williams a place.

Yanks Rally, Win, 5-2; Go 2½ Ahead

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Yankee Stadium, New York, Sept. 7.—Before a ball was pitched tonight, this Yankee-Red Sox game had already frustrated ticket buyers and it was the most complete sell-out in history.

"We could have sold 150,000 tickets for the game," said General Manager George Weiss with mixed emotions that were understandable. The sight of 70,000 fans in his ball park was heart-warming but his voice trailed off into a low moan at the recollection of the 80,000 customers who got away.

POVICH

The Yankees are headed for their third successive season of more than two million home attendance and this year the front office is wallowing in gate receipts.

No pinch is being felt in the matter of maintaining the vast network of Yankee farm teams or meeting the biggest payroll in the major leagues, including Joe DiMaggio's $100,000 salary. The Yankees are getting fat, not only at home, but on the road.

They've already smashed the record for crowd-drawing in road games, established last year by the Cleveland Indians at 1,660,000, and in the case of DiMaggio's salary, the club has actually saved money.

WHEN DiMag was making hold-out gestures last winter, the Yankees offered him a straight salary of $90,000 with the same kind of bonus arrangement, based on attendance, that they gave him in 1948. DiMaggio, on the advice of Toots Shor, turned it down and demanded $100,000 flat.

He got his $100,000, without bonuses, and thereby outfoxed himself. Under the sliding scale offered him by the Messrs. Del Webb and Dan Topping, DiMaggio's income from the Yanks this year might have gone as high as $120,000.

"We don't care about that," said Spokesman Shor. "Joe was willing to take my advice and he doesn't regret it. The main idea was to get Joe the honor of being the first ball player in history to get $100,000 cold. No bonuses, no nothing, just the nice satisfaction of being the first and only $100,000-a-year ball player."

BEFORE game time, a half dozen Yankees grabbed up their sweat jackets, detached themselves from the bench and took off on the trek toward right field. They were the Yankee bullpen crew, captained by big Joe Page, who has found himself in 47 ball games this season.

Before taking off, though, Page was talking about DiMaggio. "If there was ever a greater ball player, I never knew one," said Page. "He don't say nothing. You never hear him on the bench or on the field, but you know he's with you. He don't let you relax.

"You're pitching out there and you're in a tight spot, and you take a look at your outfielders. Just looking at DiMag and knowing the things he can do helps you over a spot. I look at him, and he doubles up his fist in a go-get-'em gesture, and it gives you a lift."

THE BIGGEST DiMaggio fan among the Yankees apparently is Page. "I had to like him from the first day I joined the Yankees in the spring of '46. I'm in St. Pete, and he comes up to me and says, 'You a left-handed pitcher?' and I nodded.

"Then he says, 'Why don't you turn in that No. 36 shirt and get a good number like No. 11. We used to have a pretty good left-hander who wore it.'

"That's all he said. But I asked for No. 11 and got it. Then I found out it was Lefty Gomez's old number. That entitled me to Gomez's old locker, and it was next to DiMag's. He was nice enough to want me close to him. We wound up roommates.

"That don't mean we had a lot to say to each other. He lets you know he's with you without wasting any words. We came off a two-week Western trip recently, and the only thing I remembered DiMag saying to me was, 'Got any toothpaste?'"

Yankee statisticians now have counted 63 different cases of injuries and illness that have beset the club since the start of the season. "If Manager Casey Stengel has ulcers, no wonder," commented one press box inmate. "I figure that by this time his ulcers have got ulcers."

Brown Hits Homer; Page Fans Side To End Game

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Yankee Stadium, New York, Sept. 7.—The league-leading Yankees, beseeched by 66,875 fans to take firm action tonight against the menacing Boston Red Sox, jolted that club deeper into second place with a delayed-action 5-2 victory.

Beaten on the score board as late as the seventh inning 2-1, the Yankees rustled up four runs to win the contest and improve their league lead to 2½ games.

Allie Reynolds was the winning pitcher, but that renowned nonfinisher was not among those present at the end despite the mere four-hit total of the Red Sox. Out of the bullpen trudged Relief Specialist Joe Page to protect the Yankees' late-inning lead.

It Was Page's Night

Page took over after Bobby Doerr rammed a triple into left-center against Reynolds to threaten the Yanks' 3-2 lead with one out in the eighth, and from that point it was Joe Page's night.

With his first pitch, Page eased the tension for the Yankees, luring Al Zarillo into a pop-up, and he got them out of the inning completely by whipping a third strike past Bill Goodman.

But Page was merely warming up for his grand magnificence in the ninth when he slipped a called third strike past Birdie Tebbetts, buzzed another past the baffled pinch-hitter, Matt Batts, and then fanned Dom DiMaggio for his fourth straight strikeout victim, unmarred by a loud foul.

Bill Johnson was the initial Yankee hero with a pair of three-baggers. His opening salvo, with none out in the third inning, against Kramer, the Yankees couldn't convert into a run, but in the seventh another Johnson triple was translated into two big Yankee tallies.

Held to Three Hits

The Yanks went into that seventh trailing 2-1, with only three hits to show against Kramer. The Boston righthander lapsed to the point of walking Keller with one out and then Johnson lashed a long drive over Ted Williams' head off the leftfield screening. Stirnweiss, running for Keller, scored easily, and the Yanks then got a break.

Dom DiMaggio who finally gathered in Johnson's drive, fired the ball to shortstop Vern Stephens for the relay, and Stephens' throw to third bounded off Johnson's back into the Boston dugout. The Yankee scrambled out of the dirt to score the run that put his club in front, 3-2.

Sort of Unexpected

Page, after getting the Yankees out of their eighth-inning distress, was given two more runs to work with in the Yanks' own eighth, by golden boy Bobby Brown. The

Say It's True Mate, Navy Can Win 5

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Annapolis, Sept. 7—Heavens to Betsy, can this be Navy?

With my own ears, I swear I heard Coach George Sauer claim today that his football team has a good chance of winning five games this year.

"Nope, we won't be the push-overs we were last season when we didn't figure to win a game, and didn't," said Sauer. "We have greatly improved our passing attack and defense, we're stronger at the ends, have a line which will match weight with most others, and we have excellent reserves.

Figures On 50-50 Chance

"I'd say we have a 50-50 chance of beating Duke and Columbia, and maybe just a little less than 50-50 against Penn, Princeton and Wisconsin. We can beat all five," said Sauer bravely.

"As to Southern California, Notre Dame, Army and Tulane, well, I doubt if there's anybody who'll give us even an outside chance against them. But we'll give them a fight."

Big reason for this optimism so unlike a Navy coach is the sudden sprouting of a few of last year's leftovers and the promotion to varsity status of last year's unbeaten Plebe eleven. In fact, Sauer is feeling so chipper about the former Plebes that he announced four of them have already won starting berths with the varsity.

They are Tackle Paul Tetreault, Guard Bill Steele, Center Bob Bryson and Left Halfback Frank Hauff. Tetreault, 210-pounder, and Steele, 195-pounder, are products of Bullis Prep's 1947 undefeated team.

Steele's eager play is especially gratifying to Sauer. The youngster came to Bullis in 1945 as a 15-year-old fullback. Last year he went to the academy and was shifted to tackle. He caught on quickly, but in the first game he broke his hand. He tried to play center with the broken hand, but couldn't handle the ball. When he recovered, near the end of the season, he was tried at guard. He blossomed quickly.

"A good, fast backfield, but a little light. Averages only 170 pounds.

Former Bullis Player

Six-foot Mike Zastrow, who tosses a good long pass, and packs a solid 209 pounds, is running close behind Earl and will certainly be used on pass defense. Mike Sorrentino, another Bullis boy, is third in line for quarterback.

At the ends, Sauer named Capt. Phil Ryan and Ron Andersen, at the other tackle Jim Hunt of Baltimore, and at the other guard, Wal Wagner. Tetreault, at 210, is the biggest regular lineman, but Steele, at 195, is one of the smallest, so the solid Navy front line will average over 200.

Sauer is pleased with the competitive spirit among his squadmen. The other day, he asked Ryan whether or not he thought he had his end spot cinched. "I'm not sure coach," said Ryan, "but I'm still hustling." Sauer then turned to Powers and asked the same question. "I'd like to see anybody beat me out," replied Powers. Sauer liked that. It reflects the spirit of this year's Navy squad. They're up.

Sale to Lions 'Break' for Brian Bell

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 7.—It was the wrong year for Brian Bell to try out for a job with the Washington Redskins.

The former Western High and Washington and Lee University star, sold to the Detroit Lions, just happened to seek a halfback berth at a time when the D. C. Pros are stocked with one of the finest groups of halfbacks in their history.

Bell almost made it. But he was competing against seasoned players like Dan Sandifer, Howie Livingston, Eddie Saenz and Steve Bagarus and such brilliant newcomers as Rob Goode, Harry Dowda and Jack Kirby.

Coaches Predict Success

The Redskin coaching staff is certain he will click with the Lions, whom he will join in Ypsilanta, Mich. Just as they are certain Fred Boensch, veteran guard and tackle sold to the Los Angeles Rams, will help the California club. That wouldn't hurt the Redskins too much since they don't play Detroit this season and their league meeting with the Rams is the final game on their schedule.

Bell's sale puts the halfback corps at its normal strength of seven but still leaves the squad four men over the 32-player limit. There is little likelihood any more players will go before Saturday night's game here against the Chicago Cardinals, but four must be disposed of before the season opens against the same Cardinals in Chicago September 26.

How Good Is He? Virginians Ask

Davis (It's Andy Nowadays) Still Popular Subject in Dixie

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Lexington, Va., Sept. 6.

CARRIED BACK to ole Virginny, one discovers:

All down the valley, from Charlottesville to Blacksburg, they're talking about Davis, not Jefferson Davis, but Andy Davis, George Washington's footballer . . . from Virginia to Washington and Lee, and from VMI to VPI, Davis everyone is wondering what Bo Rowland is wondering: Will Davis, operating on an operated knee, be the Andy Davis of 1948? Their interest in last year's freshman star is entirely subjective as Virginia, W & L, VMI and VPI all have football dates with the Colonials this fall.

HERE AT Washington and Lee, George Barclay, who moved up from line coach at Maryland to head coach of the Generals, seems to be the most popular mentor W and L has had since Riley Smith . . . Barclay won't have too much in the way of a football team, but he has one boast that not even Frank Leahy can match: the biggest tackle in the country . . . The kid's name is Jerry Jack, who tips the scales at 300 plus, just how much more being questionable since the W and L scales quit calculating after the needle reaches 300 . . . "What a bargain," Barclay quipped, "we got all of him for only one scholarship" . . .

UP AT Charlottesville, Art Guepe is wishing that the month of November never arrives. Every time he looks at his November football schedule, the Virginia head coach yelps as if he'd been tackled by Bulldog Turner . . . The November slate calls for his Cavaliers to meet Pennsylvania, Tulane and North Carolina one after another . . . To close out the October schedule, Guepe's Virginians tackle Dud DeGroot's West Virginia squad, one of the country's genuine up and coming teams . . .

Navy, Maryland Darkhorses—

Army Still Best Team in East

Editor's Note: The Washington Post will carry the weekly college football ratings and predictions of Paul B. Williamson, top man in the Nation in this field. His articles will appear Tuesday and Thursday each week.

By Paul B. Williamson

Minnesota was picked as the No. 1 team in the Nation in my first story on the 1949 college football season, so let us now turn to the sectional ratings.

In the East, Army rates as the top team, with Cornell the best in the Ivy League, North Carolina in the Southern, Tulane in the Southeastern, SMU in the Southwest, Oklahoma in the Big Seven, USC in the Pacific Coast, and Minnesota, of course, in the Western Conference.

Because a detailed discussion covering some 900 football teams would run into many pages, the Williamson system boils down the results of careful treatment into this brief outline.

King Rail Scarce

Hunters Get Bag Limit in Sora Season

By Ralph Murdock

THE SORA HUNTING season got off to a good start and most of the hunters in the Pig Point area got their limit. Hugh Waldrop, co-owner of the Dixie Tavern, just a half-mile from the Patuxent River, spent two days in the marshes and bagged 25 on each occasion. Hook Walker, an employe in the same restaurant, has hunted every day since the season opened on September 1 (except Labor Day) and has also gotten his bag limit each day. While sora are plentiful at this time, there has been a scarcity of king rail.

Ralph Murdock

L. E. McCorquodale, of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., has just returned from a successful fishing trip at Twin Lakes, Fla. Mack's boyhood days were spent on the fresh waters of these lakes before moving to Washington. With a couple of home town friends from Panama City, Merrit Pope, jr., and W. R. Moody, jr., the trio caught 11 large mouth bass. The smallest was 1½ pounds and the largest a 5½ pound beauty. On a second trip they nabbed 28 bream.

Harry Allison of the Naval Gun Factory, his son George, 14 years of age, and Jerry Jones made a nice catch of fish off Deep Creek. They fished from an inboard motor boat and picked up 52 fish which included blues, rock and spot. The majority were spot which were taken with bloodworms while still fishing. The blues and rock were captured by using "00" metal spoons.

PAT KLINE, after two unsuccessful trips which totaled a lone eel, was all smiles yesterday, when, with the aid of his wife, Sunny, Julius Weinberg and Dorothy Peake, they boated 124 spot and perch. Their catch was achieved from an outboard motor boat near Leonardtown, Md. Pat said they were pulling 'em in two at a time and that the spot were taken in an hour.

J. W. Welton and a party of friends from Washington, D. C., were trying their luck casting in the surf in front of the new Carolinian Hotel at Nag's Head. Welton, using shrimp for bait and light tackle, had landed two blues and four sea mullet after fishing for an hour or two. Young Billy Chase, age 7, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Chase of the District, took time off from playing in the sand and surf to ask angler Welton to let him try his fishing luck.

On the first cast, Billy had a strike and started winding in. He finally pulled it on the beach and it was a ten-pound channel bass. The youthful angler had proven what the others had been trying since the recent hurricane . . . that the channel bass were running in the surf. Leave it to the youngsters to pull the unexpected.

ABOARD the "Daisy June" were Bill Cochrane; his wife, Edith; Dean Bronzonie; his wife, Marie, and Deanie, jr., 13 years old; Vernon Palmer, Babbie, Palmer, age 12; the "Missus" and the writer, and two big baskets of food. It was one of those trips when the fishing was fine, the refreshments excellent, and last but not least, a skipper who did everything in his power to make the outing an enjoyable one. The captain was Brant W. Free, from the Rod and Reel Club. Let's chalk up an "E" for the pilot.

We waited an hour for the fish to surface off North Beach Park and were in the act of changing our rigs for still fishing when up they popped. A total of 33 rock (pan size), 11 blues (about one-pounders) and two trout was the catch. We used 2/0 and 3/0 Lusby all-white lures and Tony Accetta pet spoons. Twelve-year-old Betty Palmer was high gun with 12 fish. It was her first trolling effort. (What an effort!) Confidentially, we should give Betty a double "EE." One "E" for effort and the other for excellence.

Lanham Races Off

The stock car races at West Lanham Speedway last night were called off because of rain. The same program will be held next Wednesday night.

Where To Go

Bluefish—Point Lookout Area to Solomon's Island. Best catches made in afternoons. spoons are best. Use nylon leaders and no weights when they surface.

Rockfish—Chesapeake Beach to mouth of West River. (Mostly pan size). Use same baits as stated above. Holland Point has produced the best catches.

Trout — Mouth of Potomac River with Peeler crab seems best. Cooler weather should improve the trout situation. Scattered at present.

Spot—Still good at Cornfield Harbor and lower Patuxent. This species has been the backbone of salt water fishing to date. Bloodworm is the bait.

Final O. K. By Interior Seen Today

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Substantial fee increases will go into effect on the local public golf courses, it was learned yesterday.

Thus the tortuous municipal golf situation, dormant since last June, takes an upward swing.

Already the District Recreation Board, bitter critic of the S. G. Leoffler operation in the past, has concurred in the proposed increases.

The Interior Department, under which Leoffler operates directly, is expected to take favorable action today—at the latest, by the end of the week.

It's Up to Interior Dept.

Irving C. Root, superintendent of National Capital Parks, said: "Any statement at this time is premature. After all, it's up to the Interior Department—and it, alone—to approve any increase."

Root later admitted that action was imminent.

As a member of the D. C. Recreation Board, Root already has voted his approval of the rate increase.

Harry S. Wender, chairman of the Recreation Board, strongly defended its action in approving the increase.

Wender explained, "Audit reports show that Mr. Leoffler has lost $19,856.49 for the first six months of 1949. Now, I won't say that careful checking will show that the amount of loss is that great. But, we're convinced that he's suffered a definite loss and are willing to concur in the increase at this time."

Conditional Approval

Wender went on to explain that the Board's approval is conditional. If any profits are derived from the increase, they must be credited against advances to Leoffler on the construction of the Fort Dupont course and clubhouse.

Wender insisted that the stand of the board was not contradicting its previous position.

He said, "The only reason we're going along is that Mr. Leoffler can not show a profit at present rates. We'll guarantee that he will not make any profit above his salary."

The Recreation Board objected to the last modest increase Leoffler tried to put across last April 1. Wender said, "At that time, there seemed to be no justification. Now there is."

Failed to Take Action

Reason for the Recreation Board participation is that last June an investigating House Public Lands Subcommittee voted unanimously that control of the courses be taken from the Interior Department and given to the D. C. board.

Typically, the full committee never took any action.

During the drawn-out public hearings, Bertram Barr, a GGAO auditor, charged that Leoffler owes the Government $119,515.18. James B. Robinson, National Park Service assistant chief of concessions representing the Interior Department, took exception to $31,135 charged by Leoffler as operating expenses.

To date, nothing has been done and Leoffler continues to operate the courses under the Interior Department on a "contingent" basis. His last five-year contract expired last December.

"Putting Me On the Spot"

As usual, Mr. Leoffler was coy when asked about the proposed rate increase.

He said, "I don't think an increase is necessary; I know it is." Asked when it would go into effect, he replied, "Now you're putting me on the spot. You'll have to take that up with the Interior Department."

Last April, Leoffler tried to abolish "summer rates" and charge 40 cents for either nine or 18 holes. Previously nine holes could be played for 25 cents.

The Interior Department promptly stepped in and told its concessionaire he couldn't change rates and had to abide by the previous contract.

Verdeur, World Champ, Files Entry for Cup Swim Meet

Joe Verdeur, holder of the world and Olympic records for the 200-meter breaststroke, is among the early entries for the President's Cup Regatta swimming meet Saturday and Sunday at Indian Spring Country Club, chairman Joe Bertolini announced yesterday.

Verdeur, a native of Philadelphia, will represent the Brighton Hotel swimming team of Atlantic City, N. J.

The 24-year-old athlete is National AAU 200-meter breaststroke champion and is considered among the all-time great U. S. swimmers. He holds the world record of 2:30, set in winning the nationals, and the Olympic record of 2:39.3, set in winning his specialty in England in 1948.

Verdeur recently won the national 200-meter individual medley championship in California and may compete in that event here. He also will compete in the 100 and 200 freestyle.

With entries still coming in, Bertolini predicted a field of 150-160 competitors. Among the out-of-town teams entered are Brighton, Baltimore, Knights of Columbus, Maple Grove, Pa., Y-Brook of Baltimore, the Newark A. C., and the New York Women's Swimming Association.

Anne Moss, of Wheeling, W. Va., also sent in her entry yesterday. Miss Moss recently cleaned up in the Earl Weeks memorial meet here, winning among others the 100 and 200 free styles.

Tickets for the swimming events, which start at 2 and 8 p.m. both days are $1.00 for each session and $2.50 for a four-time ticket.

Heurich Wins Again, 11-2

It'll Be 'New' Longwood This Season

You won't recognize the Longwood Prep School football team of Olney, Md.

Last year, Longwood failed to score a single point in eight games. Its manpower shortage was acute. In the Devitt game, five boys were hurt, and Longwood found itself wth only 10 able bodied players. The score was, 80-0, so the game was called in the third period.

It'll be different this year. The school has adopted a more liberal policy toward athletic scholarships, and the squad now numbers 35 of the top fight high school footballers from Washington, D. C., to New England.

Tough Making Team

Competition is so rough that Washington's contingent of 10 is having a hard time making team. Among the 10 District boys are Lou Valis of Roosevelt and George Weicker of St. John's, who were All-High guard and All-Prep tackle, respectively.

The other District representatives are Guard Earl Shields, End Shocko Shearer and Halfback Jerry Spindler of McKinley Tech, Guard Al Monaco and Halfback George Papafotis of Woodrow Wilson, Center Mike Lloyd and End Eddie Fowler of Washington-Lee of Arlington, and End George Verbucken of Eastern.

Coach Ben Jones, who had to sit, helplessly, through last year's nightmarish season, is rubbing his hands in glee. He has a pair of rugged tackles, who, together, weigh almost as much as last year's entire line. They are George Sabol, 225-pounder from Lansford, Pa., and Ray Rheaulf, 215, from South Bridgeton, Mass.

Some of the local preps must have had a hint of the coming improvement at Longwood, and failed to reschedule the Olney school after making verbal agreements to play after last year's games. But Longwood has managed to scrape up games with Bullis Prep and Georgetown University's freshman club, and Charlotte Hall Military Academy, West Nottingham, Md., Military Academy, Mount St. Mary's jayvees and Western Maryland's B team.

HERB HEFT

The scholastic football season opens Friday night at Mount Vernon High Stadium where Mount Vernon faces Gonzaga at 8:30. The stadium is 5 miles south of Alexandria on U. S. Route No. 1.

7 Teams Ousted; Four Games Today

Heurich Brewing Co., Washington's representative in the all-American Amateur Baseball Association tournament, registered a 11-2 win over Baltimore, Md., yesterday on the Ellipse, in the annual double elimination event's second day of play.

In other games yesterday, Ed Caton burled a one-hitter for Zanesville, Ohio, to pace a 4-1, triumph over the Bay Ridge team from New York; Brooklyn dropped its second game of the series to Harrisburg, 3-2, and Pittsburgh scored three runs in the bottom of the ninth to edge Birmingham, 4-3.

The Bay Ridge team from New York bowed out of the tourney after dropping a 6-1 contest to Susquehanna. Also eliminated after losing two games were: Harrisburg, New York City, the Brooklyn Mohawks, Allentown, Pa., Wilkes-Barre and Maryland State.

Allentown lost to Maryland State, 12-2, then Maryland State lost to Baltimore, 7-2. Waterbury gave Harrisburg a 13-7 thumping, but lost to defending champion, Spring Grove, 7-2.

Birmingham ousted the New York City team composed entirely of Armenians, 16-4.

Today's schedule:

1:30—Washington vs. Pittsburgh (South Ellipse); Zanesville vs. Spring Grove (West Ellipse).

"DANGEROUS AND UNSAFE" is what Arlington Court labeled this dwelling in the rear of 1313 N. 20th st., Rosslyn, Va. It and one other slum dwelling was condemned in Arlington's first condemnation suit since the code was adopted in 1935.

Court Orders Shacks Razed In Arlington

Two slum dwellings in Arlington owned by a District man have been condemned as "dangerous and unsafe," it was learned yesterday.

It is the first condemnation suit in Arlington in the memory of court observers since the county building code was adopted in 1935.

The condemnation suit was decided Tuesday in Arlington County Court against the owner, Hyman Klavans of 5123 45th st. nw., by Judge Hugh Reid. Klavans did not contest the suit.

Judge Reid directed that Klavans remove two shanties at 1309-11 and 1313-15 N. 20th st., Rosslyn.

The court said it found that the dwellings were damaged by decay to an amount greater than one-half their replacement value and represented a threat to the safety of passersby and persons on adjoining property. Judge Reid ruled the shacks must be demolished.

Seven tenants testified at the condemnation hearing Tuesday that they paid from $2 to $2.50 a week rent.

The condemnation suit was filed August 25 by Building Inspector Andrew Jensen.

In a letter to County Manager A. T. Lundberg on May 11, Jensen said the shacks were occupied by as many as five persons "living and sleeping in one room." He said the health, police and fire departments "are greatly concerned about the hazards and deplorable conditions on these premises."

Yankees Halt Red Sox, 5-2

Yankee rookie, of no high home run rating, suddenly cracked a Kramer pitch into the rightfield seats with Phil Rizzuto aboard, for his fourth homer of the year.

The two runs the Red Sox did get were virtual gifts from Reynolds in the opening inning when the shocked Yankee Stadium mob watched him walk the first three Red Sockers he faced to fill the bases.

That's when the Red Sox muffed a big inning. Vern Stephens was a strike-out victim on three pitches. Bobby Doerr rifled a single through the box to score two runs, but with Reynolds still staggering and issuing a fourth walk in the session, the Sox got no more.

For the Red Sox, Doerr, their hitting ace of the last month, was playing almost a lone hand against Reynolds. He led off the third with another single, and he made a bid to tie the score in the eighth with his one-out triple to amass three of the four Boston hits of the night.

Stephens' Boot Hurts

Reynolds steadied after that first inning and the Yankees got a run for him in the fourth to cut the Boston margin to 2-1. The Yanks burst out of their lethargy against Kramer with consecutive singles by Mapes and Brown with nine out, and a run crossed the plate when Stephens booted Joe DiMaggio's grounder. But with nobody as yet out, Kramer escaped further damage by fanning Keller and Johnson in succession.

Kramer was silencing the Yankee big guns, Joe DiMaggio and Yogi Berra, who went hitless, only to fall victim of the seventh and eighth inning blows of Johnson and Brown.

And when the Yankees finally got a lead to protect, they signaled their well-thumbed Page into action, and the Red Sox were a gone gang.

first regular meeting of the new school year:

Accepted a report on cadet enrollments prepared by Dr. Corning for Representative Teague (D., Tex.). The report reiterated Corning's stand that school schedules are too full to permit inclusion of cadet drill within the school day. A study is now being made of the possibility of substituting cadet drill for part of physical education requirements, Corning said.

Granted the Recreation Department permission to use 36 white schools and 36 Negro schools for recreational programs. Approval was readily given by Negro board members after Mrs. Velma G. Williams pointed out that under revised Recreation Board rules the schools may be used for racially mixed gatherings.

Petitioned the Commissioners to return to prewar specifications in constructing new school buildings. Board members approved a recommendation of Dr. Corning calling for restoration of terrazzo floors and tile wainscoting in corridors, plastering of all walls in corridors, provision for vacuum cleaning equipment and landscaping of grounds. Dr. Corning said it would be particularly "unfortunate" if the new Spingarn High School did not have these extras.

City Spending Cuts Ordered In Alexandria

Alexandria city departments got orders yesterday to trim their budgets by $410,000 during the rest of the year as part of an effort to keep the city out of the red.

Neither Acting City Manager Joseph M. Pancoast, who issued the order, nor the city council's finance committee, which helped work it up, would say where the cuts will be made.

They explained department heads have the right to appeal on the cutting of items they deem essential to the city manager and the finance committee.

It was learned that the principal reduction will be made by holding up construction projects budgeted for this year, but not yet started. The department hardest hit will be that of the city engineer.

The city council has not yet been informed of the cuts beyond Pancoast's off-hand statement Tuesday night that they would be made. The finance committee has promised the council a report on the situation at a meeting later this month.

The slashes—more than 10 per cent of the city's budget—are part of a drive to ward off an impending $450,000 deficit this year caused by listing an unrealized $219,000 anticipated surplus in the revenue for 1949.

preparatory and commercial, will be offered. The school will be staffed by Augustinian Fathers. Announcement of the principal and faculty members will be made in the future, the archbishop said.

The five parochial schools listed by the archbishop are St. Hugh's at Greenbelt, slated for completion by October 15, and the following schools which will be completed by next September: Church of the Assumption, Nichols ave. se.; Mount Calvary, Forestville, Md.; St. John's, Forest Glen, Md., and Our Lady of Sorrows, Takoma Park, Md.

Plans for the archdiocesan high school buildings have been approved by the District government, and invitations to bid on construction were mailed recently to 15 contractors. Bids will be opened the first week in October.

Money already contributed by the laity will be used as a preliminary building fund, although the total amount needed is not yet in hand, Archbishop O'Boyle said. An additional $250,000 wil be required to furnish and equip the high school.

In his sermon at the mass, the Rev. Dr. Thomas J. Quigley, superintendent of schools of the diocese of Pittsburgh, scored the "spiritual desolation" in the world today.

Catholic schools, he said, are the only body in the country set up to teach Christianity. It is up to these schools to inculcate Christian principles, without which the social structure of the Nation cannot long endure, he said.

Colonial Dames Win $1700 Tax Exemption

President Truman yesterday approved tax exemption for the headquarters property of the National Society of Colonial Dames of America at 2715 Q st. nw.

The exemption had been opposed by the District Commissioners. Corporation Counsel Vernon R. West, testifying before a House District subcommittee on June 10, said they had uniformly opposed institutional tax exemptions through special acts. The taxes involved, he said, amount to $1700.

Internal Revenue To Hire 4022 by July; None Here

Treasury has given the go-ahead signal for a big expansion of its Internal Revenue Bureau.

An estimated 4022 new jobs are to be created before next June 30. Upward of 1500 people are to be added by the end of this year; the remainder are to be taken on early next year.

All the new workers are to be chosen from Civil Service registers and they will be assigned to tax-enforcement work the country over. None of them will be at headquarters here. In fact, the Washington office is decentralizing some of its work and gradually reducing its personnel.

The President requested Congress for funds to hire 7000 new Revenue employes to check up on tax chislers. After a Senate-House wrangle, funds for more than 4000 were approved about two months ago.

The expansion, however, was delayed because of the resolution before the Senate which would have required a 5-to-10 per cent reduction in the budgets of Federal agencies. Revenue would have had to lay off instead of hire if that measure had been approved and so the hiring was delayed until after the resolution was sidetracked.

STORY: A young man went to a Government personnel office in search of a job. An interviewer asked him:

"Are you a veteran?"

"Yes," he replied, "I served in the Army for three years."

"Do you have a service-connected disability?" the interviewer continued. (That's the lingo used to describe disabled veterans.)

"A service-connected disability," mumbled the puzzled veteran. "Yes, I have," he answered as his face lit up, "MY WIFE."

PAY-RAISE HOPE: It has slumped a bit. The Senate yesterday began debate on extension of the Reciprocal Trade Treaty, an issue which could take several weeks to dispose of. Earlier there had been reports that the pay-raise bills for Federal officials and employes and military people would be called up today.

The Democratic Policy Committee is scheduled to meet today to draft a list of "must" legislation to be enacted at this session of Congress. The pay bills have been on the "must" list and Senate Majority Leader Scott Lucas has promised to call them up for debate. On the other hand, there is a strong urge among members of Congress to end the session and go home.

COMMERCE: A lay-off that hurts has been made by Commerce. Pink slips have been given to 80 employes in its office of export control. Included in the reduction is a cereer employe with 33 years of service, a number of veterans with permanent status, and several of its top executives. A dozen of those slated to be fired have appealed to Civil Service. Commerce, incidentally, promises to try to find jobs elsewhere for the 80 employes.

INQUIRY: A subcommittee headed by Chairman Johnston of the Senate Civil Service Committee will conduct the investigation of the Civil Service test for hearing examiners. Senator Humphrey (D., Minn.) will serve with him. The Republican member will be either Dulles of New York or Flanders of Vermont.

Members of the board of well-known attorneys and judges who conducted the test and who resigned in a huff when the Civil Service Commission failed to back them up will be given an opportunity to present their side of the story. Commission officials, it was learned, are ready to testify that there is no evidence to support the charge made by some who failed of both racial and economic prejudice on the part of the board members.

Also, if the inquiry goes deep enough, several agency officials will be deeply embarrassed. These officials, it's said, gave both the board and the commission information reflecting on the ability of some of their examiners.

But when these examiners were declared to be ineligible—a ruling based in part on data supplied by their own superiors—the same officials were the first to damn the board and the commission for its decisions.

Despite all of the charges and countercharges, the Civil Service Commission has maintained a stiff silence. All of the facts in the case should be given the committee and all sides treated fairly. The commission should present the factual side of the stormy case.

Court Told Of $18,000 Payments to Sam Beard

Discovered in Safe By Fay Agents in Raid on Office of Sports News Service

More than $18,000 worth of checks, made out to Sam Beard, self-styled kingpin of District gambling, by indicted gambler Murray H. Olf, were described in Prince Georges County Circuit Court yesterday.

The checks were found in a safe in the headquarters of State Wide Sports News Distributors, 3701 Bladensburg rd., Colmar Manor, when special agents of United States Attorney George Morris Fay raided the place on March 25, it was disclosed.

Former FBI Agent James R. Sharpe, who led the Fay raid, told Circuit Judge Charles C. Marbury about the checks yesterday during a hearing on a petition by Olf for a permanent injunction restraining the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. from removing his telephones.

Denies Gambling Connection

Marbury granted Olf and nine others a temporary injunction on April 8. Yesterday, he asked attorneys for Olf and the telephone company to submit briefs and took the petition for a permanent injunction under advisement.

On the stand Olf said the checks represented repayment of personal loans made to him by Beard. Under questioning by T. Howard Duckett, C & P attorney, he denied that the checks had anything to do with gambling.

Olf said he had a trader's license and operated a legitimate business supplying news to subscribers, including radio stations WGAY, WWDC, WINX and WBUZ-FM.

After the March raids which led to the indictment of 34 alleged gamblers, Fay informed the telephone company more than 320 telephones were being used for gambling in violation of the law and asked for their removal. Olf went to court to keep his telephones.

Sharpe also testified that he found 100 sets of dice in an envelope "addressed either to Olf or to State Wide" in the safe with the checks. Olf said the dice belonged to a friend who had asked him to keep them in the safe. Sharpe said the safe also contained 120 "K books," or numbers slips, which Olf said he sold.

William J. Toole, telephone company engineer, testified that he had visited State Wide in August, 1948, when Olf was listed as having four telephones. Toole said he had found six telephones there, two of them nonstandard. Toole told the court that after he left State Wide he had gone to service the telephone of a man listed as Sam Blake. Toole said that this man turned out to be Sam Beard, whom Olf described as a "pickle merchant." Toole testified that Beard told him that Olf wanted to see him again.

The name Sam Blake also came up when Olf insisted that he occupied only the first floor of the building raided by Fay's agents. Under questioning by Duckett, Olf admitted that he supplied racing news to a ticker drop in the other part of the building. This ticker drop was listed to Sam Blake, Olf said. Sam Blake and Sam Beard were one and the same, Olf testified.

Judge Marbury asked Duckett after testimony had concluded whether the telephone company discontinued service merely on advice from the District Attorney that service was being used in violation of the law and without a public hearing or a conviction.

Duckett said that the company legal staff passed on whether the telephones would be left in or removed.

Mentally Ill Veteran Flees Guards Here

Police last night were searching for a mentally ill Army veteran who escaped from two guards at Union Station.

The fugitive is Donald C. Housrath, 42, who cut himself free from a leather restraining belt attached to leather handcuffs, apparently with a razor. He outdistanced guards in a chase of several blocks, vanishing over an alley fence.

He was being returned to the Gowanda State Hospital at Helmuth, N. Y., by Florida authorities who had arrested him in Palm Beach for forgery, police reported.

Housrath is not believed to be dangerous, according to the director of the Gowanda Hospital.

Dr. Charles Buckman said Housrath's main weakness was impersonation of Army officers, for which he had been confined at the institution in July, 1945.

Last December 31 he was released in custody of his mother, Mrs. Margaret Housrath, of Buffalo, N. Y., for convalescent care.

He violated his parole by leaving the State and was arrested on a bad-check charge in Phoenix, Ariz. He was committed to a mental institution there and escaped.

Arrested again in Florida, he was committed to the State hospital at Chattahoochee. He was being returned to the New York institution because he is a New York resident.

Woman, 31, Falls From 8th Street Rooming House

A woman identified as Mrs. Dorothy Porteous, 31, 2900 1st st. ne., fell or jumped from a third-story window at a rooming house at 916 8th st. nw. last night. She was identified from papers in her purse as the wife of Clarence Porteous, a guard at the Pentagon.

Detective Lieut. Richard Felber of the Homicide Squad said a note found in her purse was addressed to the probation officer. She was on six months probation on a drunkenness charge, Felber said. The note, he said, begged forgiveness of the probation officer, but said she could "not go on."

Mrs. Porteous was taken to Emergency Hospital, where she is in critical condition suffering a fractured skull.

Driver Who Socked Park Officer Held On Theft Charge

Jesse James Gilcrest's love of liberty early yesterday upset a motorcycle park policeman, but his race for freedom ended later when two Washington officers picked him up.

As a result, the FBI charged Gilcrest with violation of the Dyer Act by interstate transportation of a stolen car. U. S. Commissioner C. S. Lawrence set a hearing for September 15, and ordered bond of $2500.

Park Policeman Richard Wellman, on his way home to Fairfax, Va., spotted a car he believed stolen, going across Highway Bridge. He pursued the auto, and in the Pentagon pattern drew alongside. The driver, Wellman said, then forced him off the road, upsetting his motorcycle. He fired one shot at the car.

Two hours later, Pvts. Kenneth H. Herbert and Morton J. Walker were cruising at 33d and M sts. nw. They recognized the car from a description broadcast by Wellman. The Washington officers stopped the auto and arrested Gilcrest and his wife.

After the FBI stepped into the case, on the ground that the car was stolen in Maryland, police refrained from filing charges. Gilcrest's wife was released when agents said they were convinced she did not know the car was stolen.

Bus Union Rejects Offer Of 5c Raise

Will Petition ICC To Bar A. B. & W. From Operating Outside Virginia

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

An A. B. & W. peace proposal, including a pay raise of five cents an hour, was rejected by striking AFL drivers and mechanics yesterday.

Instead, the 400 bus company employes voted to seek the assistance of the Interstate Commerce Commission in limiting State operation of the struck motor line to the confines of the State of Virginia.

Fred Dominy, president of Division 1131, Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employes of America, said that his local will petition the ICC for aid within a few days. The union will argue that the State of Virginia, which seized the facilities of the A. B. & W. bus line last July 21, when the union struck, has no right to operate the buses into the District of Columbia.

Only Way to Apply Pressure

Union officials said that the move to halt buses on the border—that is, at the Highway and Memorial bridges—was being attempted because the union had no other means to put on pressure to bring about an end of its dispute with the company.

When the State seized operation of the bus lines last July, the drivers and mechanics could have refused to work, but would have lost their jobs in doing so. Therefore, union officials explained, the men were virtually forced to work for the State, though in technical strike against the company, on a "volunteer" basis.

The union at the time of the strike asked for a 30-cents-an-hour increase in wages and other benefits. Under terms of the old contract, under which the men work for the State, the drivers got $1.35 an hour, the mechanics $1.45.

Proposal Cost Put at $100,000

In the eleventh hour before the strike, the company offered a wage increase of 4 cents an hour, but it was rejected by the union.

During conciliation sessions last week, the union indicated it would settle for 15 cents. The company hiked its old offer to 5 cents, and added several fringe items, including a shortening of the "platform work" week from 42½ to 40, the new contract to run to October 31, 1950. The company said it would put its pay provisions into effect this week, and the new hours November 1. The proposal would cost the company $100,000 a year, according a spokesman.

The union rejected the offer, according to union officials, because the proposal lacked retroactivity pay, and did not provide an adequate increase in the hourly rate to make up for anticipated loss in working hours and take-home pay because of the newly proposed working schedule.

Judge Asks Research Aid On Juveniles

Miss Cockrill Calls For Statistical Help As Delinquency Rises

Another increase in juvenile delinquency here last year prompted Juvenile Court officials to renew an appeal for a statistical department to improve the court's handling of youth cases.

The request for more research personnel highlighted Juvenile Court Judge Edith Cockrill's annual report for the fiscal year 1949 which was sent to the Commissioners yesterday.

Records revealed that juvenile delinquency complaints took a 7 per cent rise during the year ending last July 1 over the preceding year. A total of 3146 complaints were entered in fiscal 1949 as compared to 2930 the year before.

1951 Cases Closed

Social service investigations of complaints last year resulted in 1951 cases being closed without court hearings. The remaining 1717 complaints were settled before the Juvenile Court judge.

Judge Cockrill observed:

"Such a department [court research] would be able to carry out special research projects in regard to delinquency problems such as delinquency in particular areas of the city and causes of recidivism, which would not only benefit the community through the improvement and redirection of work in Juvenile Court, but would be important . . . through pointing out various objective data which could be utilized in the community to prevent juvenile delinquency."

Concern Recalled

The newly-appointed judge also recalled the "congressional and community concern" last spring over the necessity for making public more detail on the court's handling of the youth problem.

A Senate District subcommittee has approved legislation to require daily reports on the court's caseload, with names of defendants kept secret.

Other court figures for last year showed that 3697 new complaints were entered against adults, of which 3261 were on charges of non-support.

'Deplorable'

Couple Held For Neglect Of 5 Children

Discovery of five small brothers in "deplorable" filth and squalor, Monday, brought charges of cruelty to children against a Washington couple yesterday.

They were held under $500 bond each for grand jury action at arraignment before Judge Aubrey B. Fennell in Municipal Court.

The two are Edward Vaughn, 29, and Virginia Hodge, 26, said by police to be his common law wife, both of 1015 South Carolina ave. se. They were arrested Tuesday night.

The boys, ranging from five months to seven years, are sons of the woman, police said. She claimed yesterday that Vaughn is their father.

Police said the couple abandoned them completely over the Labor Day weekend without food, clothing or sanitary facilities. Vaughn's mother, Mrs. Evelyn Vaughn, 1204 6th st sw., said her son called her and told her the woman had left and he could not care for the children.

She went to the place, then called police. She said the boys were nude, and she clothed them in torn sheets. She managed to get the baby a bottle of milk and take him from a crib where he had been for three days.

Mrs. Maud C. Montgomery, a policewoman who responded to the call, described the conditions as "deplorable." Wine bottles were strewn on the floor, she said, and there were no mattresses in the place.

The infant was taken to Gallinger Hospital for treatment for malnutrition. The oldest boy went with Mrs. Vaughn. The others are in custody of the Board of Public Welfare.

Polio Aide Appointed

Rick J. La Falce, who has been in charge of publicity for the infantile paralysis "March of Dimes" drives for the past three years, has been appointed information director for the Washington chapter of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, according to Elwood H. Seal, president of the local chapter.

Expectant Mother Is 41st Fatality; Coroner's Inquest Scheduled Today

A Washington cab driver was held for a coroner's inquest at 10 a. m. today after, police said, his cab struck and killed an expectant mother early yesterday.

The victim was Mrs. Drucilla M. Hull, 27, of 1228 11th st. nw. Detective Harold E. Gipe of the police accident investigation bureau said she was thrown 52 feet by the impact and that the dampened pavement at the scene showed skid marks for 58 feet.

After an autopsy, Dr. Richard M. Rosenberg, deputy District Coroner, said she suffered cerebral concussion and hemmorhage, punctures of the lung, kidney and liver, a fractured pelvis and fractured leg. He estimated that her child would have been born in three months.

The cab driver is Charles B. Rouse, 26, of 5131 Hanna st. se. He was charged with driving at unreasonable speed, as well as marked held for the inquest, and was released in custody of a Diamond Cab Co. official.

Detective Gipe said that Mrs. Hull, who is estranged from her husband, was one of a party of four who parked in front of 713 H st. nw., about 2:10 a. m., intending to go to a Chinese restaurant. The others were Mrs. Hull's sister, Ann R. Mitchell, with whom she lives; Oliver W. Hacker, 1932 Calvert st. nw., and Anival C. Martin, 4412 New Hampshire ave. nw.

Hacker told Detective Gipe that after the car was parked, Mrs. Hull left it first, and started across the street ahead of him. She was about in the center of the street, standing momentarily still, Hacker told the officer, when she was struck.

First Accident Noted On Shirley Highway

First accident on the new Shirley Memorial Highway, opened to traffic Tuesday, was reported last night by Virginia State police. They said two cars sideswiped a half mile north of Woodbridge, when one driver failed to notice a lane separation and drove into the wrong lane. No one was injured.

Maryland Crash Kills Alexandria Woman

Mrs. Mary G. Ryan, 39, of 922 S. St. Asaph st., Alexandria, Va., was killed instantly about 8 o'clock last night in a head-on crash on Route 29, about one mile south of Clarksville, Md.

Maryland State police said Mrs. Ryan was a passenger in a car driven by her husband, Thomas Ayan. The other driver, they said, was Glen E. Darnell of Washington Grove, Md.

Police said Darnell told them he applied his brakes as he approached the oncoming Ryan car and that his auto skidded to the center of the road. Several passengers in the Darnell car were taken to St. Agnes Hospital in Baltimore. None of them was believed seriously injured.

Separate, Equal Facilities Called Educationally Unsound

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

To provide the same school facilities for Negroes and whites separately is "educationally unsound," a prominent Negro educator testified yesterday.

"But it is what this system of segregation brings us to," said Dr. Martin D. Jenkins, president of Morgan State College of Baltimore in Alexandria District Court.

He was a witness for the plaintiff in a suit brought by 17-year-old Constance Carter, who asks that she be offered "equal" facilities at Arlington County's Hoffman-Boston High School for Negroes or be admitted to Washington and Lee High School for whites.

His statement came in answer to a question from Lawrence Douglas, defense counsel for the county school board and superintendent of schools, during the second day of the trial before Judge Albert V. Bryan.

Would Set Up Cadets

Dr. Jenkins said it was "of course a ridiculous answer," but he would advocate establishing a cadet corps for as few as nine pupils at Hoffman-Boston because the State "must offer the same facilities to Negroes and whites."

"We are subscribing to something that is educationally unsound, but something we are bound to do," he declared.

Douglas attempted to show that strictly equal facilities for a handful of pupils at Hoffman-Boston is impractical, since there are 1700 students at the white school.

"As a school administrator, would you advocate employing a faculty and organizing summer school at Hoffman-Boston when there was not a demand for one?" Douglas asked.

"Yes, under Arlington County circumstances," replied Dr. Jenkins, who is a member of Howard University's Bureau of Educational Research.

Earlier, counsel for the Carter girl had said there were inequalities between the two schools in many respects, including library, vocational arts, recreational, athletic and science facilities, as well as in curricula.

The defense introduced a 125-page report, prepared last month, comparing the two schools. It was prepared by Dr. Howard A. Dawson, director of rural service of the National Education Association.

"Evidence that there is discrimination against Negro pupils by the school board . . . on account of race or color is too scant and ephemeral to deserve serious consideration," the report said.

Jenkins Report Introduced

A report by Dr. Jenkins, prepared in January, 1948, was introduced by the plaintiff. It said, in part:

"I come to the inescapable conclusion that pupils attending the Hoffman-Boston High School are provided educational programs, facilities and opportunities which are far inferior to those provided pupils attending Washington and Lee High School."

Dr. Ellis O. Knox, professor of education at Howard University, also testified for the plaintiff. He said the Negro high school curriculum was "out-and-out inferior" to those of Washington and Lee.

Dr. Edmund B. Henderson, head of the department of physical education in Washington Negro schools, called the Hoffman-Boston physical education facilities "decidedly inferior."

Representing the plaintiff are Leon Ransom, Oliver Hill and Spottswood Robinson. The hearing will be resumed at 9:30 a. m. today.

Fairfax Heads Decline to Ask County Manager Referendum

The Fairfax County Board of Supervisors yesterday declined to take the initiative in seeking a referendum on whether the county should adopt county manager government.

The supervisors agreed, however, that the county's rapid growth requires a government change, but that any move for change should start with the voters.

State law provides two ways of asking the Circuit Court to order a referendum: (1) by resolution of the supervisors or (2) by petition of 10 per cent of the county's qualified voters.

The change would increase the authority of the supervisors, it was pointed out.

"If we ask for a referendum . . . there may be a feeling the supervisors are trying to cram it down the peoples' throats," Supervisor Maurice W. Fox declared. "It would have a much better chance if it came from the people."

The request that the board seek the referendum came from Harold A. Ward, former president of the county Federation of Citizens Associations, who said the county's affairs have become so complicated a specially qualified administrator is needed. The county population, he said, has increased from 40,000 in 1940 to an estimated 110,000.

Ward declared adoption of a manager government would provide a counter move against efforts of Falls Church to annex county territory.

Fairfax now operates under a slightly modified version of the standard form of Virginia county government. The supervisors have little control over county departments.

Special legislation gave the county an executive secretary who acts as purchasing agent and clerk of the board but who has little administrative authority.

Ward said he will circulate the referendum petitions in an effort to get the issue before the voters at the November election.

In another action yesterday the board's tie-breaker, R. Ludwell Popkins, cast the deciding vote against rezoning from suburban to urban residential a 13-acre tract owned by the Crestwood Construction Corp., near Baileys Crossroads.

Tuthill, Draheim Nominated For Arlington School Board

Curtis E. Tuthill, incumbent A. E. R. Draheim received the nominations last night of the Arlington lington School Board member, and School Board nominating convention.

Tuthill was named on the first ballot, but three additional ballots were required before Draheim received the necessary two-thirds majority shortly before midnight.

By the fourth ballot only two candidates remained, Draheim and Roland W. Stoebe. Two had been eliminated on the second ballot and one more on the third.

Jerome E. Levy and James E. Millar were the two eliminated on the second and George C. Updegraff on the third.

Nearly 700 persons—500 delegates from civic and educational organizations and about 200 spectators—were present during the session at Washington-Lee High School.

Tuthill, a psychology professor at George Washington University, received 340 votes on the first ballot, 23 more than required. First elected to the School Board two years ago, he lives at 5612 24th st. N., Arlington.

Draheim, who was second to Tuthill in the first voting and who led each subsequent ballot, is chief of the pre-service training section, office of personnel, Department of Agriculture.

On the determining ballot he received 245 votes to 218 for Stoebe.

After the first ballot, both Draheim and Stoebe declared in three-minute speeches that they favored supplemental bond issues rather than a sales tax to raise additional school construction funds. Updegraff urged a sales tax.

The convention adopted a resolution asking the convention chairman to write each of the eight countywide organizations represented urging the appointment of a member to a permanent convention to prepare for a 1951 nominating convention when three vacancies will occur on the school board.

Only two vacancies occur this year to be filled in the November elections. Last night's was the first such convention to be held in the county.

New Polio Cases Again Show Decline

Boy Stricken Here

5 Polio Cases Raise Area's Total to 133

Five new polio cases were reported yesterday in the Greater Washington area, bringing the year's total to 133.

Only one victim was from the District, a 11-year-old boy from the 2200 block of Observatory pl. nw. The District total is now 55, compared with 65 this time last year.

A 28-year-old man was stricken in Fairfax County. He lived on Parkview ave., in a housing development called Tyler Park, just outside Falls Church. In Montgomery County, two children were reported stricken. One was a 6-year-old boy from Gaithersburg; the other, an 8-year-old girl from the 1400 block of Hayes ave., Silver Spring. The last case was a 7-year-old girl from the 800 block of 24th st., Arlington.

For the second successive week fewer new cases of infantile paralysis have been recorded throughout the Nation, U. S. Public Health Service officials reported last night.

The continued decline, they said, may mean that the Nation has passed its polio peak of the year nearly one month sooner than last year's peak week, which ended September 18.

Such a development would be particularly welcome since this year's total is almost twice as much as for the corresponding period of last year, the second worst polio year in the Nation's history, they said.

2915 New Cases

Nationally, they reported 2915 new cases of polio were reported during last week from all States excepting Illinois. The total compares to 2968 new cases, also including Illinois, recorded during the previous week.

Delay in receipt of the Illinois statistics, the officials said, prevented issuance of a complete statistical roundup. The missing State's toll, however, could scarcely change the overall, optimistic report, they added.

The year's toll of new cases reported from January 1 to last Sunday was 23,458—with perhaps another 250 to be added for the one missing State's weekly report. In contrast, last year's toll for the same period was 12,632, including 62 cases recorded for the one week in Illinois.

Seven New Cases Here

The District of Columbia, the statictics showed, had seven new cases last week, the same number as reported for the previous week. Maryland had 13 new cases for the week, or three less than during the previous seven days. Virginia had 27 new cases, to 34 recorded during the week ended August 27.

Six of Maryland's 13 cases were reported from Montgomery and Prince Georges County, with three each for the two counties. Of Virginia's 27 new cases last week, two were recorded in Fairfax County, one from Arlington, and none from Alexandria.

The Nation's polio record by States:

New England States—Maine, 37; New Hampshire, 24; Vermont, 15; Massachusetts, 194; Rhode Island, 17; Connecticut, 56.

Middle Atlantic States—New York, 538; New Jersey, 137; Pennsylvania, 78.

East North Central States—Ohio, 171; Indiana, 61; Illinois, —; Michigan, 287; Wisconsin, 101.

West North Central States—Minnesota, 168; Iowa, 72; Missouri, 101; North Dakota, 52; South Dakota, 38; Nebraska, 39; Kansas, 52.

East South Central States—Kentucky, 66; Tennessee, 36; Alabama, 13; Mississippi, 6.

West South Central States—Arkansas, 44; Louisiana, 7; Oklahoma, 50; Texas, 63.

Mountain States—Montana, 8; Idaho, 27; Wyoming, 7; Colorado, 55; New Mexico, 16; Arizona, 11; Utah, 19; Nevada, 1.

Pacific States—Washington, 50; Oregon, 9; California, 89.

$14,500,000 to Be Sought For Combatting Polio

New York, Sept. 7 (AP).—Basil O'Connor, predicting there will be 20,000 more polio cases before Christmas, said tonight that $14,500,000 will be sought in a one-week emergency fund drive opening Thursday.

The president of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis said the Postoffice Department has agreed to deliver contributions sent in envelopes addressed only with the word "Polio" in care of local postoffices.

O'Connor said the foundation has sent out $5,662,164 in epidemic aid so far and has $1,150,000 left.

Jaycees to Stencil Safety Signs at School Crossings

Junior Chamber of Commerce members yesterday launched a campaign to stencil "Stop Before You Cross" signs in red letters at the intersection nearest every school building in the District.

The members stenciled the first sign yesterday at the Thompson School, 12th and L sts. nw.

Chamber President Paul Matthews said 60 Jaycees are assisting in the traffic safety project in cooperation with the Commissioners, the Traffic Advisory Board and the District Traffic Department.

The District's 100,000 school children will return to classes next Monday.

The Washington Post

BLIND DONOR—Nurse Evelyn Jensen, former Army nurse, takes the blood of Lloyd Greenwood, one of the blinded war veterans who donated yesterday to the Red Cross Blood Bank. Nurse Jensen was stationed at Hospital 17 in Naples, Italy, when Greenwood, a B-24 pilot, came in as a blind patient

The fourth annual meeting of the Blinded Veterans Association at Hotel Washington opened yesterday.

There was the usual convention clatter, gay greetings and loungers around the lobby. Upstairs, there was the clink of glasses, and even a card game or two.

A couple of things stamped the delegates as different from the usual convention crowd. First, most men were accompanied by their wives; secondly, most men carried canes of a sort.

But contrary to popular belief, these blind persons smoked about as much as the average conventionaire, and otherwise caroused in the same general vein.

200 Ex-GIs Expected

About 200 ex-GIs, mostly from World War II, were expected to be registered by this morning when regular activities get under way.

So far only five seeing-eye dogs have been checked in, and stay in the hotel rooms with their masters. Chuck Garland, a member of the BVA board from New Britain, Conn., said that few veterans owned dogs, despite the fact they are entitled to them from the Government.

"The Army tried to train us without dogs and most of the fellows find that they aren't too practical now," he said.

Garland, himself an organizer for the BVA, said that around 800 of the 1600 World War II veterans are members of the organization. "Each year around 100 more persons become blind from war injuries," he said, "and there is an increasing need for education so the blinded veteran can take his rightful place in the community."

Not all delegates are totally blind, however. Some have such varieties as "barrel" vision where sight is only straight ahead or pinpoint vision where sight is only in a specific area.

Few veterans are regaining their sight, Garland said. The exception is usual in the case of those held in POW camps where malnutrition was a contributing cause.

Today, the convention gets down to business. Tonight and tomorrow night, the public is invited to attend an exhibition of "Blinded Veterans on the Job. Shown will be the various crafts and skills which sightless men can do.

Six members of the District group yesterday gave their blood at Red Cross national headquarters, inaugurating a program of periodic donations by regional establishments in 21 states.

Rev. William Mosedale Burial Rites Held at Falls Church

Funeral services for the Rev. William John Mosedale, 77, retired Free Methodist minister and builder, were held yesterday at the Roberts Memorial Methodist Church, 4th and Van Buren sts. nw. Burial was in National Memorial Cemetery, Falls Church.

Mr. Mosedale died Monday at his home, 5013 Dalton rd., Chevy Chase, following a heart attack.

A native of Newfoundland, he was ordained in the ministry in New York after moving there during the 1890's. He came to Washington in 1913 and occupied pulpits in Spencerville, Alisia and Baltimore, Md.

His last pastorate was at the Rockville Free Methodist Church from which he retired in 1930 after five years incumbency. Following his retirement, he held part-time services at the old Roberts Memorial Methodist Church, 12th and N sts. nw.

After leaving the pulpit, Mr. Mosedale engaged in the building business and participated in the construction of the Wardman Park Hotel and Westchester Apartments. He gave up active business two years ago.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Geneva Perry Mosedale; four sons, Ralph, Wellington, James and Leland Mosedale, and a daughter, Mrs. Ida Louise Boyd, all of Washington, and Edward Mosedale, of British Columbia.

John Frank McInnis

Philadelphia, Sept. 7. (Spl.). John Frank McInnis, naval architect and wartime coast director of ship construction for the U. S. Maritime Commission, died Tuesday night in Abingdon Memorial Hospital after an operation. He was 59.

During the war, from May 15, 1942, until May 15, 1945, McInnis directed coast shipbuilding activities from the Philadelphia offices of the Maritime Commission. He previously served with the commission in Washington.

A graduate naval architect from the Webb Academy, McInnis was born in Merimac, Mass., November 8, 1889. He has been associated with shipbuilding and boatbuilding activities all his life.

Funeral services will be held Saturday at 11 a. m., at Oliver H. Bair's, 1820 Chestnut st. Burial will be in Ivy Hill Cemetery.

He is survived by his wife, Ruth; a son, John F., jr.; a daughter, Mrs. Raymond C. Brecht of 225 Cliveden ave., Glenside, and two sisters, Mrs. Edwin H. Armstrong and Mrs. Arthur D. Tuttle, both of New York.

Mrs. Margaret D. Hughes

Omaha, Sept. 7 (Spl.).—Mrs. Margaret D. Hughes, 85, mother-in-law of Navy Secretary Francis P. Matthews, died yesterday. Mrs. Hughes had lived with the Matthews here for 10 years.

She was the widow of the late John J. Hughes, of Battle Creek, Neb., former State senator.

Gen. Short Military Burial At Arlington

Maj. Gen. Walter C. Short, Army commander at Pearl Harbor at the time of the Japanese sneak attack which precipitated World War II, was buried yesterday in Arlington Cemetery with full military honors.

The 65-year-old general, self-styled "scapegoat" of the worst military disaster in the Nation's history, died at his Dallas, Tex., home of a heart attack Saturday night after an illness of several months.

General Short and Rear Admiral Husband E. Kimmel, Navy commander at the Hawaiian base, were accused by a presidential board of "dereliction of duty," but a joint Senate-House committee later held that only "errors of judgment" were involved.

Graveside rites were held at the cemetery following funeral services at Fort Myer Chapel. The flag-draped casket was borne from the chapel to the grave on a horse-drawn caisson.

An escort was provided by two Army platoons and a color guard bearing the Flag of the United States, the Third Infantry regimental colors and the major general's flag of two white stars on a red and white field.

An Army band played "Abide With Me," "Faith of Our Father," "Our Fallen Heroes," "Rock of Ages," "America the Beautiful" and "Religioso."

A 13-gun salute was fired by 75-milimeter field artillery pieces as the procession moved to the graveside. The ceremonies were closed with three volleys by a firing squad and taps played by two buglers. Maj. Gen. Luther D. Miller, chief of Army chaplains, officiated.

First Helpful, Then Didactic, Then Furious At Having Her Advisory Suggestions Ignored, Woman Puts Harried Niece in Bad With Family

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: When my husband and I came here last year, my uncle and his wife were invaluably helpful to us in getting settled. But it soon developed that my aunt (by marriage) was taking full charge of our affairs with a heavy hand, making decisions and dictating arrangements even over my husband's veto.

When I asserted myself, by acting contrary to some of her opinions, she found me "stubborn, ungrateful" and maliciously maligned me to my mother and brothers. They believed her, enough at least to effect a painful rift in our affections, especially as concerns my husband.

Maddeningly, Auntie continues to act the perfect friend to me, coming to see the baby, bringing gifts for him, doing "favors" for me, etc.; and my husband, who can't understand my family's goings-on, has turned from them with cool indifference.

Girl Married Into a Civilized Family

JOHN'S FOLKS are all intelligently loyal to each other, free of jealousy and pretense, unobtrusively helpful when they can be, never thinking of "acknowledgment,"—and though my family never caused me any grief before and I had always loved them dearly, I confess I can't understand their present behavior either.

Should I rudely avoid my aunt in future, as protection against future probing into the details of our life, and against further vicious attempts to tear us to pieces to those I love? If I try to shut her out, it will bring more embittered reproach on us, I know—"You used us, then cast us off"—and my conscience will feel some truth in it. Or should I continue to try (for my uncle's sake) to be friendly and "grateful" to this woman I've grown to hate?

I am young yet, not wise enough to deal with a woman of her type; and I need advice. I am not her only "victim"—and victim I truly am. I've heard from her, in scathing version, the most ugly intimate scandal about people I've never met; and needless to say, she bandies gossip about me, too. Please help me soon. V. L.

Major and Minor Neurotics Collide

DEAR V. L.: Psychologists tell us that in any type of social exchange—in business, in friendship and in kinship,—when formalities are waived, when the ice is broken, and spontaneous attitudes come into play, then all that is neurotically ailing in the personality of either participant begins to crop out like a body rash.

However (if you'll pardon the mingled metaphor), it takes two neurotics to get tangled up in a sparring match, subjective or verbal, after the rash begins to show. If one party to the situation is substantially normal,—i.e., comparatively free of either "dependent" or "dictator" patterns of neurosis,—he or she (the healthy person) will instinctively, or with intuitive foresight, sidestep "emotional" involvement with the other's temperament.

This your husband seems to have done, with impromptu good sense, as regards both your aunt's outbreak of neurotic symptoms and your family's tacit championship of her squawk. In turning an unmistakeably cold shoulder on the hue-and-cry, he properly put them in quarantine insofar as his emotions are concerned. In effect his attitude says, "Count me out; I don't deal on that level," which is as it should be.

Niece Is Weakened By Dependency Bias

UNLIKE your aunt, who is aggressively neurotic in her drive to dominate, as a means of forming binding ties, because she lacks the know-how to love generously and thus inspire reciprocal devotion, unlike her, you are only mildly neurotic as yet, and passively so; and your neurotic pattern has to do with wanting "dependency" perquisites.

Thus you seized with self-serving alacrity on the aunt's and uncle's patronage when getting settled, instead of firmly declining (with thanks) an excess of supervisory coddling, as a truly adult character would have done perforce, to preserve a solid area of self-reliant independence and privacy of life. But at least you're honest enough to sense your venal contribution to a performance which led to sordid squabbling; and if your aunt could be equally reasonable there would be no problem.

Familiarity with a woman of your aunt's type is like opening Pandora's box and loosing a cloud of gnats and scorpions; and halfway measures won't counteract the consequences of that mistake. In my opinion, you should either get tough with Auntie, by asking her to stay out of your life altogether if she can't refrain from vilification and tale-packing when displeased; or you should accept the penalties of your indecisive attitude, without blaming her further for your discomfort in the set-up. Learn About Modern Touch In Furniture

By Ann Pringle

Much has been written about artists and writers who lose contact with "the people." Modern art and modern literature are too esoteric, some of the critics say. People can't understand it, and it's all the fault of the artists and writers who have lost the common touch.

This may seem a far cry from the subject of modern furniture, but I think of it every time some one tells me that he hates modern furniture, or he doesn't understand it, or why must it be so radical, or why don't the designers find out what the people really want?

Well, who is at fault, the creators or the people who don't like what they create? My guess is that the blame lies partly with the latter group.

Quite possibly there are artists and writers who strive for complexity where simplicity would serve better; who enjoy confusing their public, or who do so because they haven't the ability to make themselves clear. In the same way, there are furniture designers who make a showy and ugly table or chair because they are not creative enough to design a truly simple and beautiful piece.

True talent is rare. But how much more constructive it is to discover anad recognize it than to sit back and damn its poor imitators. People who condemn modern furniture may well have seen so much bad design that they find it hard to distinguish the good when they see it.

Of course, it takes a little energy to discover and appreciate it. But learning to read takes energy. Learning about music takes energy. Anything that increases your knowledge and understanding is going to take a little work at first. If you don't care to make the effort, that's your privilege. But isn't it sort of silly, then, to blame the designers for your own laziness?

Globe-Trotting Soroptomists Swap Travel Experiences

GLOBE trotting members of the Washington Soroptimist Club swapped summer travel experiences at the organization's first fall luncheon held yesterday at the Willard Hotel.

Miss Mary Bourke of the Lewis Hotel Training School told how she took a busman's holiday by inspecting kitchens and hotels in Europe. Mrs. Lorraine Goode recounted the fun of a 6 a. m. native dance in Acapulco, Mexico. Mrs. Laura Waters, head of the Waters Travel Service, related a few headaches of a tour director and reported on tryouts of actors for parts in the Oberammergau "Passion Play."

"Get nylon underclothes that will dry while you say your prayers plus a hair net and let's go to Europe," a friend telephoned Miss Bourke, who did exactly that. With a week's notice she sailed on a Friday the thirteenth on the Queen Elizabeth. While aboard ship she inspected the galleys observing the preparation of 1000 pounds of roast beef and 5000 eggs for a daily serving.

In Great Britain, Holland, Switzerland and France as well as Belgium, she went through hotel kitchens. While in Luxembourg, Miss Bourke says that she constantly was hailed by Americans. "The only sad touch there was seeing so many graves, including that of General Patton," said Miss Bourke.

Miss Bourke laughingly insisted that Laura Waters was kissed by men, women and children all over Europe. Then she added seriously, "She's America's best good-will ambassador on the continent."

Mrs. Waters, who completed four strenuous trips to Europe during the summer, performed three jobs in one. As national secretary of the American Society of Travel Agents, she had to contact travel agents in each country she visited. Chairman of the ECA Committee of the Marshall Plan Countries for Tourism of ASTA, she contacted all governments on future travel plans. Also, she was her own tour director.

"If you want to travel, take up gin rummy," advised Mrs. Goode. "In the midst of a game a friend of mine persuaded me to go on a three-week trip to Mexico.

"I lost 10 pounds and had a wonderful trip. The scenery is beautiful. I had a gay time in Acapulco attending a 6 a. m. of Roseita," related Mrs. Goode.

Miss Ella Werner, director, Southeastern Region of Soroptimist, told of organizing the first Soroptimist Club in North Carolina during a month's stay in Greensboro.

Miss Mary V. Judge, Soroptomist president, announced an attendance contest for the Washington club beginning in October. First prize will be a trip to Bermuda, second a weekend in New York City, and the third a fitted travel bag.

To Meet Today

The District of Columbia Chapter, Alpha Iota Sorority, will meet at 8 p. m. today at the Women's City Club.

Saxby is the son of Mrs. H. A. Saxby and the late Mr. Saxby of Richmond, Va. The announcement was made at a cocktail party for a few intimate friends.

Miss Schuyler has been attending George Washington University, and is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority. Lieut. Saxby was graduated from West Point in June 1945. He is at present with the Third Infantry.

The wedding will take place in December.

Chester McLain Honored at Party

Chester A. McLain, former general counsel of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, was honored yesterday at a cocktail party given by a number of his associates and friends. High Commissioner in Germany.

Independence Day of Brazil Feted Here

IN Washington yesterday there was a double celebration for the Independence Day of Brazil. From 5 to 7 o'clock members of the Brazilian colony were received at the embassy by the Charge d'Affaires, Minister Afranio de Mello-Franco, and later, at 9, a reception was held at the residence of the Brazilian Ambassador to the Organization of American States, and Senhora Accioly.

Ambassador Mauricio Nabuco was not on hand for the two parties, as he left for Brazil early in the summer to attend national celebrations of the birth anniversary of his father, Joaquin Nabuco. The latter was the first Ambassador of Brazil to the United States and one of the leading statesmen of his country.

For last night's party the Accioly residence was decorated with fall flowers in shades of yellow, white and bronze. A buffet supper was served, and a program of Brazilian music was sung by Miss Delora Bueno, well-known television star. The artist is the daughter of Jose Bueno, foreign trade adviser to the Pan American Union, and Senhora Bueno. For the many friends her singing has made for Brazil, Miss Bueno received last evening the "Good Neighbor of the Year" award from Ambassador Accioly and Ambassador Daniels.

Mental Habits Checkup Is Vital for Health

By Ida Jean Kain

NOW that Labor Day has officially ushered in the back-to-work season, and everyone is settling down to the job in earnest, it's a good time to look to the months ahead. If you're not satisfied with past performance, why repeat it? There's no need to keep battling the same old problems or to get back on the worry-go-round. Revaluate—check up on your mental habits.

IDA JEAN KAIN

Mental health, the experts tell us, is more than the absence of disease. It is the ability to get along in your daily living with yourself, your job and with other people. It gives a zest for living that comes from being at peace with oneself. And its importance, both to the individual and to the job, is becoming more widely recognized every day.

Often an honest self-appraisal can set you on the right track, but if you feel your problems cannot be solved alone, seek the best expert help available. Expert help means someone who is trained to understand human relations—your doctor or minister, a teacher, social worker or psychiatrist. Just talking things over helps enormously. Authorities strongly stress that it's a sign of intelligence to seek help, not a sign of weakness.

The United States Public Health Service provides a mental health clinic in Washington for certain Government workers. The clinic's aim is to evaluate the individual's problem and help the person get a better understanding of it. Dr. Henry J. Myers, clinic director, points out that a problem can often be solved with a little expert advice and sometimes just by talking it over with a neutral party.

There's one thing Dr. Myers would like people to understand—emotional difficulties do not necessarily mean there is anything seriously wrong with a person's mind. Many of the folks who come to clinics or to private psychiatrists are simply up against some persistent or apparently insoluble problem.

The experts are emphatic on this point: The symptoms of mental illness are found to some degree in all of us—it's the degree that counts. When we are faced with difficult problems, all of us experience emotional reactions—anxiety, grief, fear and so on. Only when these emotions interfere with our daily adjustments, cut down on our productivity, makes us continually unhappy, do they indicate the need for expert help.

Just knowing that everyone experiences conflicts, both within themselves and with their environment, helps amazingly. If you have to work but would like to chuck the whole business and get away on a tramp steamer, dont think you're odd. So would lots of other people. Life calls for one adjustment after another and you aren't the only one who gets involved.

In some cases, the job may be the last straw. On that score, authorities have advised: Don't always be worrying about your job. It's just as bad to be overly conscientious and too much of a perfectionist about work as it is to be irresponsible. It's a good life you're trying to make. Try hard to keep everything in its proper place and have a balanced set of interests—work and play.

This fall, take a healthy attitude toward mental health and get a new lease on a happier life.

Success With One Child No Test

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

WHATEVER a mother does that is successful, she is apt to consider it a universally successful method of acting.

One can only become humble about the worth of ideas when one deals with hundreds of children, not just one. Every mother ought to have at least three children to practice on before she can say that any method of child care is foolproof and always works.

Mrs. W. W. P., having been very fortunate with her first baby, feels confident that her methods are ideal. "My boy is now 11 weeks old," she writes, "and he is one of the happiest best-natured babies I have ever seen. He has been sleeping from 8 p. m. to 6:30 a. m. since his sixth week."

"He is fed when he is hungry, not every four hours. At first we had trouble with the formula, it was either too weak or too strong. At three weeks, as an experiment, we tried a bottle of whole, homogenized milk with a little syrup in it. It worked fine and he has had whole milk ever since.

"We also started solid foods at an early age. At 6 weeks he ate vegetables, cereals, fruit and at 7 weeks, meat.

"Perhaps I have been more fortunate than others but I believe it was feeding him when hungry and giving him whole milk that has made him so healthy and good-natured."

It is now routine practice to feed a baby when hungry and let him make his own schedule. But, ordinarily to give a 3 weeks old baby whole milk without the advice of a pediatrician would be a risky venture.

Cow's milk is designed for calves who grow at a much faster rate than humans. So, it is more richly provided with cell-building protein. The addition of water and sugar makes it more nearly like human milk. With your baby's fine digestion and your practice of giving him all the milk he wanted whenever he wanted it, his progress should have been much the same with or without diluted milk.

Almond Torte With Cream Filling Tops in Taste and Looks

Impressive in looks and high in taste appeal is this Almond Torte. The two delicate cake layers are crowned with a baked on meringue, spangled with almonds and a dusting of sugar and cinnamon.

Almond Torte

½ cup butter
1¼ cup sugar
4 eggs, separated
1 cup sifted cake flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
⅛ teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons evaporated milk
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
½ cup chopped blanched almonds mixed with 1 tablespoon sugar
½ teaspoon cinnamon

Cream butter until smooth and plastic. Add the ½ cup sugar gradually and beat until creamy. Add egg yolks and continue beating until well blended. Sift flour with baking powder and salt. Add alternately with the milk to the first mixture, beginning and ending with flour. Add vanilla. Pour into two 9-inch cake pans which have been greased and lined with waxed paper. (When cutting circles of waxed paper to line bottoms of pans, leave two tab ends on opposite sides of circle long enough to come up sides of pan and lap over edges. These tabs make it easy to lift baked layers from pans.) Whip egg whites until stiff. Fold in the ¾ cup sugar, then spread over the top of the unbaked mixture. Sprinkle almonds over top, then the sugar-cinnamon mixture. Bake in moderate oven (325° F.) about 40 minutes. Run spatula around edges of layers and let layers cool in pans about 5 minutes. Then lift layers out and place on racks to cool. When cold, remove paper. Spread one layer with almond cream filling and place second layer on top.

Almond Cream Filling

2 tablespoons cornstarch
1 egg
1 teaspoon almond extract
2 cups evaporated milk

Blend sugar and cornstarch. Add egg and stir until well blended. Add milk slowly to blend well. Cook over boiling water, stirring constantly, about 10 minutes. Remove from heat and add almond extract. When cold, spread between layers of Almond Torte.

Banana Cream Chiffon Cake

REMEMBER how your family went for that last chiffon cake you made? You'll give them an even bigger thrill when you serve the new Banana Cream Chiffon cake, the latest variation of the original.

BANANA CREAM CHIFFON CAKE

1⅛ cups (1 cup plus 2 tbsp.) sifted cake flour (spoon lightly into cup, don't pack)
¾ cup sugar
1½ tsp. baking powder
½ tsp. salt
¼ cup cooking (salad) oil
2 unbeaten egg yolks (medium-sized)
3 tbsp. cold water
½ cup sieved very ripe bananas (1 to 1½ bananas)
½ tsp. vanilla or ½ tsp. grated lemon rind
½ cup egg whites (4 whites)
¼ tsp. cream of tarter
Preheat oven to 325 degrees (slow moderate).

Measure (level measurements throuout) and sift together into mixing bowl the flour, sugar, baking powder and salt. Make a well in the center of the dry ingredients and add in order: the salad oil, egg yolks, water, bananas and flavoring. Beat with spoon until smooth.

Measure into another large mixing bowl the egg whites and the cream of tartar. Whip until whites form very stiff peaks. They should be much stiffer than for angel food or meringue. DO NOT UNDERBEAT. Pour egg yolk mixture gradually over whipped egg whites—gently folding with rubber scraper just until blended. DO NOT STIR. Pour into ungreased 9-in. tube pan, 3½-in. deep immediately. Bake 50 to 55 minutes in slow moderate oven (325 degrees) or until top springs back when lightly touched.

Immediately turn pan upsidedown, placing tube part over neck of funnel or bottle. Let hang, free of table, until cold. Loosen from sides and tube with spatula. Turn pan over and hit edge sharply on table to loosen. 8 to 10 servings. Split cake crosswise in 3 even layers with a saw-toothed knife. Spread Whipped Cream Filling (recipe below) between layers (widest layer on the bottom) and over top and sides.

Garnish with banana slices. Keep in refrigerator until serving time. Dip banana slices in lemon, orange, grapefruit or pineapple juice to keep from turning dark.

WHIPPED CREAM FILLING

1 pt. chilled heavy cream
1 tsp. vanilla
½ cup confectioners' sugar

Whip the cream in chilled bowl until very stiff. Beat in the vanilla and confectioners' sugar. If sides are left uniced, use half the amount of ingredients.

About Making Grape Jelly

I would like to make grape jelly this fall. But every year so far the jelly has crystallized into sharp sour flakes. Isn't there some scientific method which eliminates this without using pectin or diluting with other juices, such as apple? B. W.

Sugar crystals in jelly are caused by using too much sugar, adding the sugar too near the end of the cooking process, too little acid in the fruit used (that is, grapes too ripe) or delaying the sealing too long.

To prepare grape juice for jelly, use grapes, some of which are not entirely ripe, remove from stems and slightly crush to form some juice and avoid sticking during the first of the cooking process. Do not add additional liquid and boil until skins and seeds have separated. Put into jelly bag and allow juice to drip through. Do not squeeze.

With juice prepared in this way, usually three-fourths cup of sugar to each cup of juice is right for grape jelly. Boil the juice in small amounts (do not boil more than four cups at once). Boil in a shallow sauce pan to hasten evaporation which will result in a better colored jelly. Bring juice to boil and add sugar. Stir for a minute until sugar is thoroughly dissolved and then boil the jelly briskly without stirring. After about 5 minutes start making the jelly test, using a metal spoon: When the syrup runs off the side of the spoon in two distinct drops that flow together in a sheet, the jelly is done. Or, a more precise test of doneness is to use a jelly and candy thermometer. For a firm jelly cook to 220 to 222 degrees F. and for a soft jelly 218 to 219 degrees F.

When done remove immediately from heat. Allow bubbles from boiling to disappear, skim off the remaining scum and pour immediately into hot sterile glasses. Seal with melted paraffin.

We have just completed our new home and would like to invite a group of friends and relatives. Can you give me a brief outline of what is expected or what is in good taste for an "open house?" I have never attended one and I have a general idea, but am not sure. E. M. P.

An "open house" usually takes the form of an afternoon tea or informal reception. To invite your guests you could write informal notes as you would a letter, telephone them or send cards upon which you have written something like this:

At home
Sunday, September 11
3 to 5 p. m.
Betty and Bob Burns
Your Address

If your new home is in the country or in a part of the city with which most of your guests are unfamiliar, it is nice to include directions for reaching you. If you or your husband are clever at drawing, the directions could be in the form of a map with landmarks along the way drawn in.

As for the party, the guests are greeted at the door as they arrive by you or you and your husband. After they have visited a few minutes they could be taken on a tour of the new home and then directed to the dining room for refreshments.

The food is arranged on the dining room table which is laid with a lace or embroidered cloth and decorated with a floral center piece and candles. You could serve iced fruit punch if the day is warm or coffee and/or tea. The beverages are arranged at the end or ends of the table and the rest of the food along the sides. With the beverages you could serve dainty open faced sandwiches, tiny cakes or cookies, mints and nuts.

In order that you may be free throughout the afternoon to greet your guests in the living room, you should arrange in advance of the party for several of your close friends to assist in the dining room. Someone should be asked to pour (if you serve two beverages, ask two women to pour) and one or more women should be asked to be on hand to replenish food.

I recently purchased a limed oak dining room table, very light in color. I want to refinish my dark maple server to match. Is it possible to do so at home? F. R. W.

It may not be possible to make the server exactly match the limed oak without much experimenting, but you can surely make it more nearly the color of the table by doing this: Take off the present finish with a commercial paint and varnish remover. If the wood has just a maple finish, it may be light enough to apply the limed oak finish at this stage. If, however, the wood with finish removed is still too dark, it will have to be bleached. Use a commercial wood bleach and follow directions which come with the product you buy.

When bleached and sanded smooth, go over the bare wood with flat white paint and wipe off almost immediately to leave the paint only in the pores. Allow a day or two to dry completely, sandpaper smooth and wax. It would be wise to try the finish on an under part first to experiment and thus get a better match.

I would appreciate it if you could give me through your column the address of the Carlton Stainless Steel Co. I have a stainless steel double-boiler, the handle of which has become broken. M. B.

The housewares department of a large department store here (telephone District 5300) carries stainless steel utensils made by the Carrollton Manufacturing Co., Carrollton, Ohio. Since the Thomas Business Registry does not list a Carlton Stainless Steel Co., I'm inclined to think that the Carrollton Co. is the maker of your pots. If you find this to be the case upon checking, you can order the new handle through the housewares department of the above mentioned store.

How can I clean my waffle iron without damaging the factory-conditioned grids? I made blueberry waffles, and have been unable to clean the iron satisfactorily. F. C.

Lay a wet paper towel over the grids and close the iron. Allow to stand for 30 minutes or so to soften the deposit and then brush it with a stiff brush. If all the deposit cannot be removed by brushing after the first soaking, repeat soaking until it can be. When the grids are clean and smooth, brush generously with unsalted fat and heat the iron to baking temperature, then turn off and allow to cool slowly. Let fat remain on grids until next use. The next time you use it, discard the first waffle, as it will be very greasy.

When making blueberry or other fruit waffles, it is often necessary to use a little additional fat on the grids to prevent sticking.

Can you advise me of any establishment that will put new blanket binding on blankets, and if so do they furnish the binding? R. A. D.

There is a bedding firm in the 3500 block of Connecticut ave. which rebinds blankets. They can be reached by calling Ordway 1812. They tell me that because there are so many different blanket colors, it is difficult for them to keep all colors in stock. Therefore, they ask their customers to bring the new bindings with the blankets.

Inquiries and contributions to Ask Anne column must be in written form. We regret that time does not permit handling them by telephone. Address questions to Anne, Room 408, The Washington Post, Washington 4, D. C.

Expert Sees Video Lagging Long Time

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Sept. 7 (AP).—The president of the National Broadcasting Company, said today it will be years before television has even half as much courage as radio.

The NBC president, Niles Trammell, said: "radio is universal—it can reach everybody."

"More than 94 per cent of the families in this country own at least one radio set and there are 20 million additional sets in cars, out-of-doors and in public places," he said at the annual meeting of NBC affiliates here.

"Radio is getting bigger all the time," he continued. "In the past year over five million families have been added to the radio population. In 1948, radio families increased by over 1,600,000—an increase which alone exceeded the total television families at the end of the year."

But while radio remains the basic broadcast medium, Trammell declared, "Television is taking the country by storm."

Trammell said NBC's television network will grow to 26 connected stations and 20 non-connected stations (receiving network programs on film recordings) by the end of the year compared with only seven connected East Coast stations a year ago.

NBC has 19½ hours a week of television network time sold to 28 advertisers compared with 8¾ hours to 18 advertisers a year ago, Trammell continued, for about twice the dollar business of its nearest competitor.

In the matter of total station hours sold, he said, NBC leads with 770 compared with 338 for the Columbia Broadcasting System, 260 for the American Broadcasting Company and 227 for the Dumont network.

Trammell said all indications are that "a false depression scare" is over "and that businessmen are beginning to seize their opportunities with new enery and planning."

Getting In on the Conversation

The old saying, "Children should be seen but not heard," is still a favorite for some parents. Most of us, however, feel that it is more normal in the family to have the youngsters come in on conversations.

When friends come to visit and when Dad and Mom get absorbed in discussing household affairs or what is going on at church, the youngsters may begin to feel left out. Even though the grown-ups may be polite enough to answer youngster's questions in an offhand manner, the kids aren't really "in on" the conversation.

If, every now and then, some simple explanation of what is being discussed is given to children or if the grown-ups spend a little time talking with them about things in which they are interested, there's less likely to be constant interruptions from young fry who feel they're being left out.

As children grow older, they naturally have more to contribute to table talk and after-dinner conversation. It is important that parents keep this in mind and take the initiative in encouraging participation by asking them for their opinions.

THE MAN WHO

—didn't count his chickens before they hatched

The Lyons Den . . .

By Leonard Lyons

NEW YORK.—Mrs. Paul Porter has an unusual charm bracelet with mementoes symbolizing every phase of their lives, starting wth the fraternity pin he gave her. It includes gold charms signifying his law career in Kentucky, his move to Washington and his jobs as OPA director, publicity director of the Democratic National Committee, chairman of the FCC and special ambassador to Greece. . . . Porters newest assignment was as American delegate to the Palestine Conciliation Commission. When he returned from Lausanne this week, he brought for Bess Porter's bracelet a charm symbolizing his assignment with the commission and the progress of the all-important, delicate job. He brought her a gold snail.

In Lausanne a newspaperman asked Porter to confirm a story he had heard, a story that General Electric had perfected an invention enabling eavesdroppers to beam a channel at a room several blocks away and overhear and record all conversations there. "You were chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, and you'd know about it," said the reporter. "Is the story true? Is there such an invention? . . . "No," replied Porter, "there's no such thing. But General Electric has perfected a machine which makes a man invisible. As a matter of fact, Charlie Wilson of General Electric is sitting at this table right now, invisible but listening to every word we're saying."

Edmond O'Brien, whose newest picture will be "Dead on Arrival," plays the role of a secret police agent in "White Heat," in which he succeeds in capturing the gangster, played by James Cagney . . . The producer of "Dead on Arrival," in introducing O'Brien to a visitor, said: "He's the only man known to have outwitted James Cagney, with the possible exception of Jack Warner."

Ethel Smith, the organist, was starred last month at the Lido in Paris, which has a chorus line of nude girls. Miss Smith asked Jacques Fath to design her gown and he produced one which covered her up to her throat. He started to measure her waist, and Miss Smith told him: "It's 25 inches. I think you'd better make it 26, though, to give me some room." Fath made it 22 inches . . . And when Ethel Smith sat down to play the organ at the Lido, she reddened, choked and gasped, "It's obvious that Mr. Fath never has played an organ."

TRY IT CARRY A MOUTH ORGAN AND LEARN TO PLAY IT

Music for your own pleasure and the enjoyment of others need be no further a way than your own pocket. Any child with a touch of music in his bones can, with a little practice, learn to play a harmonica. If you have a desire to play this simple musical instrument, start carrying one wherever you go, and practice on it in your spare time.

When you purchase most any harmonica, easy directions for playing are inclosed. After the method of producing notes by blowing or sucking on the reeds is mastered, it will be fun to pick out simple tunes tunes and learn to play them. Many old favorite songs that we all know so well, such as Westerns or plantation songs, make good tunes to learn.

Famous experts like Larry Adler and John Sebastian are cheered by the most severe music critics. They often use several harmonicas during a performance. Perhaps you will never be invited to be a soloist with a great symphony orchestra, but you can have hours of fun playing solos for yourself.

What's The Verdict?

BENEFICIARY

Q. A man had a life insurance policy whose beneficiaries were his children. Some years after he took out the policy he became ill. His landlady nursed him, and in gratitude he said he would make her the beneficiary if she would pay the premiums. She agreed, but thinking that a beneficiary had to be related to the policy holder, she described herself as the man's sister in the application for change of beneficiary. After receiving the revised policy, she wrote "Friend" over the word "Sister" previously written. The man dies, and the company refuses to pay her. Is she entitled to the proceeds?

A. It is not necessary that the beneficiary of a policy be related to the insured person. One who takes out a policy on himself may make anyone he wishes the beneficiary. That being true, he could make the landlady the beneficiary. The fact she misdescribed herself at first, then changed the description, is of no effect . . . F. L. D.

INCIDENTAL INTELLIGENCE

Scores of traffic tickets get "fixed" here every week without being reported on the regular "fix list." There are at least two methods being used—probably more that I haven't heard about yet.

This is that "day" we used to hope for. Automobile salesmen are taking people for rides in demonstrators again, and offering more for your trade-in than it's worth.

Since the phone book contains no key to its numerous abbreviations, Ken tried to get the meaning of "rr" by calling the Telephone Company. He reports that it took "20 minutes of earnest conversation with supervisors, information specialists, operators and just plain folks working for C. & P.—none of whom knew who, if anybody, is the editor of the book—before I could discover that 'rr' means 'in the rear of.'"

"As she sat there, the lady of the house next door marched out into the middle of her lawn, fixed us with a cold look, planted a sign in the ground, and huffed back inside.

Merry-Go-Round

Gen. Bradley Hits Defense Of Vaughan

By Drew Pearson

Kindly Gen. Omar Bradley, top Chief of Staff, was attending a cocktail party given by Mrs. Louise Heiberg, former wife of Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

General Bradley is discreet and not especially talkative, but as an officer jealous of the prestige of the Army, certain developments at a Senate hearing had got under his skin.

For, despite Bradley the amazing Senate investigation disclosures, President Truman had made a statement just before the Heiberg party vigorously defending the chief subject of the Senate probe—Gen. Harry Vaughan.

"You see this left arm," said the Chief of Staff to one of the guests as he arrived. "It served me all during the war and I don't know what I'd do without it. But I'd have given it gladly if the President hadn't made that statement defending Vaughan."

Pontiff Orders Peace

Members of the Catholic hierarchy intimate that it was His Holiness Pope Pius XII who ordered Cardinal Spellman to make peace with Mrs. Roosevelt. They also indicate that Spellman, once the Pope's favorite and in line to become papal secretary, may have lost that privileged position to Cardinal Stritch of Chicago, a more liberal prelate and a friend of the Roosevelt family.

In addition to the Vatican, Ed Flynn, Irish boss of the Bronx, emphatically demanded that Cardinal Spellman make peace with the former First Lady. Flynn, who knew Spellman long before he became cardinal, was brief and to the point.

"If you don't patch up this fight with Mrs. Roosevelt," he told Spellman, "we won't be able to elect a Catholic to any office in New York State for the next 30 years."

Flynn had in mind the long-time alliance between Jewish and Catholic voters in New York, which has voted Democratic ever since the early days of Roosevelt. This alliance, responsible for Democratic victories during the past 16 years, was seriously threatened by Catholic opposition to former Governor Lehman and his candidacy for the Senate.

Cardinal Spellman himself was credited with spearheading the Lehman opposition because the former Governor last year served on a committee of protest against banning The Nation from New York public school libraries.

The Nation was banned because it carried a series of articles by Paul Blanshard, prior to publication in book form, critical of the church. Lehman, on the other hand, argued that since New York public schools are attended by Protestants and Jews as well as Catholics, their reading material should not be fixed by Catholics alone. Lehman felt that the church had every right to set the reading material in its own parochial schools, but not in public schools supported by the taxpayers.

Cardinal Spellman, however, vigorously disagreed and wrote the former Governor a sharp personal letter. And later Lehman received word from Catholic leaders that if he ran for the Senate this fall he would have organized Catholic opposition.

Speaks for Lehman

All this was one reason for Ed Flynn's blunt warning to Cardinal Spellman that he would have to make peace with Mrs. Roosevelt.

Actually, Mrs. Roosevelt had no idea that the cardinal was coming to see her in the country. And, contrary to all reports, the parochial school issue was not discussed. The cardinal talked about the late President, plus various nonchurch matters.

Finally Mrs. Roosevelt brought up the question of Governor Lehman and expressed the opinion that it would be in the best interest of all the people if he were to become a candidate for the Senate. She also mentioned the cardinal's reported opposition.

The cardinal then said that when he got back to New York he would be happy to make it emphatically clear that he was not opposed to Lehman. He further said he would issue instructions throughout his domain that there should be no church opposition to the benign former Governor of New York.
